Gore Denies U.S. Is Seeking to Impose World Abortion Right

WASHINGTON - The United States wants to modify the plan of action to be debated at the world population conference in Cairo next month to refute "outrageous allegations" that the document attempts to establish a worldwide right to abortion, Vice President Al Gore said.

Japan Carmakers Go Back to Their Basics

... New York Times Service TOYOTA CITY, Japan -As part of its quality testing, Toyota Motor Corp. used to require that surroofs on its automobiles be opened and closed 1,500 times in a room cooled to 30 degrees below zero

Then it occurred to the company that few people opened their sunroofs even once when it was that cold outside.

To cut costs, the required testing has obsessive attention to detail, a shift that been reduced to 500 times at a temperature they contend will not compromise basic Japan in the last few months. Toyota's new small sport-utility vehicle known as the RAV 4 and made on a lightly automated assembly line here, is considered to be the first embodiment of the oew approach by Japan's largest car company.

Was Pilot's Life Rosy or Not? Doubts Raised on Suicide Finding in Air Crash

Committed by Our Staff From Dispatches

RABAT, Morocco - The deaths of a pilot and his 43 passengers and crew members took on an air of mystery Friday. His relatives and friends described the pilot as a happy man who would oot have committed suicide, yet the official investigation said on explanation was possible except a deliberate decision to ram his plane into the side of a mountain. "My son is sane," the mother of the pilot told the Rabat daily L'Opinion. "He cannot commit suicide, much less kill anyooe, because he loves everyone."

"He has no problems, family or otherwise," said Amina bent Tayeb, the mother of the pilot, Younes Khyati.

An official inquiry into the crash said no technical problems could be found.

"The only reason for the accident is the deliberate desire of the captain, who switched off the automatic pilot and hurled the aircraft at the ground," the head of the inquiry, Mohammed Moufid, said at a news conference Thursday

It was a "deliberate decision to com-mit suicide," he said.

Traders Cheer Cool Growth And Benign U.S. Inflation

Dow Soars by 51 Points And Dollar Climbs on Belief Rates Won't Rise

By Lawrence Malkin

International Herald Tribune
NEW YORK — The government's latest picture of the American economy showed it growing benignly on Friday, cheering the world's financial markets with the bope that a moderate expansion would dissuade the U.S. central bank from pushing up interest rates to cool inflation.

Wall Street spurted ahead so sharply that automatic trading curbs were imposed on the New York Stock Exchange, and the rush from abroad 10 get in on the action sent the dollar shooting up in New York by three pfennig against the Deutsche mark. The Commerce Department's revised figures for the gross domestic product during the second quarter showed the economy growing at an annual rate of 3.8 percent - not much different from the preliminary estimate issued a month ago of 3.7 percent but as much as a balf a percentage poiot lower than expected by financial

The government's revised data caught more of the late spring buildup in inventories by business, especially retailers, as consumers pursued a steady and relatively weak spending path after last fall's post-recession splurge.

Consumer spending rose by 1.4 percent during the period, a slight improvement over the earlier figure but far more sustain able than the spending rate of almost 4.5 percent during the fall and winter quarters. This left more goods on store shelves, so growth in inventories was adjusted upward to $56.3 billion from $54 billion. A reduction in inventories curtails, which holds down GDP growth in a statistically ob-scure relationship that is only vaguely understood by most traders.

Inflation continued to be moderate measured at 2.9 percent. This was clearly good news for bond markets, where volatility this year has made stock markets

The underlying question posed by the data, said John Williams, chief economist

omy will level off before it reaches capacity, or will it hit the wall and force the Federal Reserve Board to raise short-term interest rates this autumn.

The Fed has pushed up rates several times this year, beginning Feb. 4 and most recently on Aug. 17. These tightening moves increase the cost of loans, dampening demand for credit and thus slowing economie growth to what the central bank hopes will be a noninflationary level.

On Friday, the financial markets bet on the benign economic scenario that does not require Fed tightening.

Bond markets firmed in the United States and Europe. Interest yields on the benchmark 30-year U.S. Treasury bood fell on Friday to 7.48 percent, from 7.53 percent.

Lower interest rates meant that the computerized hlack boxes, which determine big institutional stock trades sent buy signals, even though a slower economy eventually will mean smaller stock divideods.

Demand for stock was further exaggerated by professional traders who have sold more than a billion stocks short this year in a bet that Wall Street's decline will continue. If they are wrong, they will have to pay more to buy stock they don't own.

The stock market immediately took off. with the the Dow Jones industrial average jumping 27 points within the first half-hour of trading and then advancing steadily through the morning more 50 points, setting off the stock exchange's trading curbs. The index closed 51.16 points higher at 3.881.05 in New York er, at 3,881.05 in New York.

A few European markets were still open, and in London and Paris they moved up sharply in sympathy.

At the heart of all this movement was the effect of the inventory numbers in holding down growth in GDP. What the inventory numbers measure is essentially a change in the rate of growth, and no one really can tell whether inventories have risen because businesses have bought more goods in the hope of selling them or are simply stuck with them because they guessed wrong about future sales.

Could the higher inventories imply a See ECONOMY, Page 10

Returning Jews Take Fond Last Look at Lodz Ghetto

By David Margolick

LODZ, Poland - For three days this week, Lodz was once more filled with the wailing sounds of klezmer music and Yiddish songs. Men with beards and hats once again strolled down Piotrkowska Street. Cries of "Mazel tov!" filled the air as a rabbi hammered a shiny new mezuzah into a doorway at Revolution of 1905 Street. And Jews again lined Lutomierska Street, unrestrained by ghetto walls.

Fifty years ago this month, the Germans cleared out all but about 800 of the Lodz ghetto's 220,000 Jews, deporting to Auschwitz the 80,000 or so who had not already been gassed or died of starvation or disease. By war's end, all but 10,000 of them, remnants of what had been, after Warsaw, the second-largest Jewish site in Europe, had perished.

This week, 200 former ghetto dwellers re-turned to Lodz, many for the first time, most for probably the last. They came from Israel, the United States, Germany. The Republicans have so far been qualified as "rightist radicals" and are not officially considered "hostile to the constitution."

Algerian Militants Declare a Regime

PARIS (AFP) — The Armed Islamic Group, the most hard-line of the underground Islamic fundamentalist movements in Algeria, announced the formation on Friday of an alternative government. The group said its leader, Sharif Gousmi, also known as Abu Abdallah Ahmed, would head the so-called Califate government. A cabinet of 11 ministers named in a communication to Agence France-Presse included Ali Belhadi, the second-in-command of the rival militant Islamic Salvation Front. Mr. Belhadi is currently in detention. The prime minister was listed as Mohammed Said, a former Islamic Salvation Front official who went over to the Armed Islamic Group last month.

In Morocco, meanwhile, the government said Friday that Algerian nationals would be required to obtain visas for visits. The amouncement was made after the arrest of two Algerians who were described by the Interior Ministry as "members of an armed group." The two men were arrested Thursday at Fez, the ministry said.

A similar bomb caused extensive damage last year at the World Trade Center in New York. Intelligence sources said there was no evidence that the attempted bombing here was connected to that attack, but they could oot rule out a link to other bombings, possibly including one in Argentina oo July 18 that destroyed the Bueoos Aires offices of two Jewish groups and killed nearly 100 people.

An Iranian identified as Hossein Shahriarifar pleaded oot guilty in a Bangkok court Aug. 18 to several charges in connection with the truck bomb, including murder, rohbery and illegal possessioo of explosives and firearms.

The accused, who has also been identified as Hossein Dasjiri, is suspected by Thai police to be a militant Muslim fundamentalist implicated in other acts of terrorist violence in various countries during the past two years.

He was arrested June 3 in Hat Yai. southern Thailand, with two other Iranians, identified as Babak Taheri and Basr Kazemi. They were released Aug. 16 for lack of evidence connecting them to the truck bomh. At least one other Iranian is still being sought, the police said.

A Thai government prosecutor has charged that Mr. Shahriarifar and one or more accomplices built a massive bomb hy packing a one-ton steel water tank with plastic explosive and a large amount of ammonium nitrate fertilizer mixed with diesel fuel. The bomb that devastated the World Trade Center in February 1993 also used ammonium nitrate.

The tank was loaded into the back of a six-wheel rented truck and wired to the truck battery via a switch on the dashboard, the police said.

The bomh was discovered after a man of Middle Eastern appearance in his 30s bumped into a comple of motorcycles beside a department store in central Bangkok while driving the truck March 11. When the motorcycle owners demanded compensation, the man offered them a wad of foreign currency, which they refused. An argument ensued, and the man fled on foot, abandoning the truck.

Police officers drove the vehicle to a police station, where it sat for a week before the owner went to claim it. It was only then that police checked the water tank and found the bomh inside, along with the battered body of a Thai driver for the rental agency. Both his arms had been broken, and he had apparently been strangled with a rope.

Attorney General Opas Arunin said last week that witnesses recalled seeing Mr. Shahriarifar and the driver, Chom Thila, purchase the water tank that was used to hold the bomh. At the time of the accident, the truck appeared to be heading toward the Israeli Embassy about 230 meters (250 yards) away. Officials said it was also possible, but less likely, that it was on its way to the U.S. Embassy by a circuitous route necessitated by one-way traffic.

Earlier that day, demonstrators had gathered at the Israeli Embassy to protest the Feb. 25 massacre by an Israeli settler of at least 29 Muslim worshippers at a mosque in the West Bank town of Hebron. The authorities speculated that the bomh may have been intended as retaliation for that attack.

Deputy Foreigo Minister Surin Pitsuwan said that as a result of the attempted truck bombing and previous warnings about international terrorist activity in Thailand, there had been closer consultations and information exchanges with foreign governments lately.

We are on full alert against terrorists and acts of terrorism," he said.

Iran so far has oot commented on the case here. But on Wednesday, the state-run Tehran radio demanded that the U.S. secretary of state, Warren M. Christopher, apologize to Iran for having accused it of involvement the bombing last month in In Argentina, an investigating judge has issued arrest warrants for four Iranian dip-lomats, but the attorney general has said the evidence against them is insufficient. Iran has denied any role in the bombing, which remains unsolved.

Senate Decorum: Plumbing a New Low?

WASHINGTON - Io the view of some lawmakers, decorum in the Senate reached a new nadir this week as political acrimony and partisan bile evidently became the defining characteristics of their stately institution in the Clinton era. As the Senate struggled to resolve a weeklong impasse over President Bill Clinton's crime legislation, its members turned theatrical, unfurling oratory ranging from the silly to the sublime and displaying emotions worthy of classic tragedy or comedy — or perbaps both.

Perhaps the week's most audacious performance was rendered by Senator Alfonse D'Amato, Republican of New York, who embellished his arguments against the bill's crime prevention programs by brandishing a large picture of a pink pig and belting out his own version of the nursery classic. President Clinton had a bill, E-I-E-1-O. And in that bill was

Mr. D'Amato's ambitious a cappella prompted an acid retort from a normally restrained Democrat, Frank R. Lautenberg of New Jersey.

"It's the barnyard all right," Mr. Lautenberg observed.
"But it's not the pig we're looking at. It's the other stuff. It's the other stuff. And if it looks like it and it feels like it and it smells like it, we know what it is."

Some senators complained that the pitched, emotional tenor of the crime debate signals a new low in legislative etiquette and predicted an end to the days when Republicans and Democrats would compromise for the good of the coun-

For more than a century and a half, Patek Philippe has been known as the finest watch in the world. The reason is very simple. It is made differently. It is made using skills and techniques that others have lost or forgotten. It is made with attention to detail very few people would notice. It is made, we have to admit, with a total disregard for time. If a particular Patek Philippe movement requires four years of continuous work to bring to absolute perfection, we will take four years. The result will be a watch that is unlike any other. A watch that conveys quality from first glance and first touch. A watch with a distinction: generation after generation it has been worn, loved and collected by those who are very difficult to please; those who will only accept the best. For the day that you take delivery of your Patek Philippe, you will have acquired the best. Your watch will be a masterpiece, quietly reflecting your own values. Desperate Cubans Press Ahead With Exodus

HAVANA - Neither the fierce rains whipping the palm trees nor the deterrent measures taken by President Bill Clinton were going to keep Juan Carlos González from making another attempt to take to the sea in search of a new future in the United States.

In fact, thousands of people like Mr. González, fearing that this might be their last chance to leave the country, are speeding up their exodus. rather than besitating over the uncertainty of the

"Maybe if I wait, things will change here," he said. "Maybe things will improve economically here for people. Or maybe tomorrow they will let me leave on a plane. But I think this is the moment. It is my destiny to go now."

All along a stretch of the Cuban coast, from the Malecon in central Havana to Cojimar, sevral kilometers east, where Mr. Gonzalez was waiting, small clusters of Cuhans could be seen Thursday bohbing in the water. Others were on the beaches, bartering for provisions and making final arrangements to leave, rather than waiting for a change in either the weather or politics. Bad weather was predicted through the weekend. Mr. González first tried to leave a week ago.

At the drop of a green flag by Heathrow's chief air-traffic controller, the microlights wobbled aloft. It was a vision straight from Hieronymus Bosch, whose creatures traveled in eggshells slong under bright colored sails.

Passengers' stomachs twisted to keep up with their lurching seats as the pilots, nimble as windsurfers, shifted the wingsail for balance. Worried passengers squeezed their legs tighter around their pilot's waist, a clinch known as the "microlight position" that is the only way to accommodate two people.

The outlook brightened for passengers from the moment of the emergency landing. The Evening Standard's reporter was able to dictate a fresh story, sheltering his portable phone behind a hedge.

Others made their way to the nearest pub, encouraged by a carload of airport officials who met them in the lane with promises of better flying weather after lunch.

So, even though most planes' radios had been put out of commission by the rain, the formation pressed on to cross the channel - "always a slightly existential moment," a pilot noted cheerfully.

It took 12 sunny minutes, without anyone needing the life inchets.

In France, the Macmillan Flight landed at Abbeville in Picardy as easily as in the Kent field. Was it a sign of Europe past or Europe-yet-to-come that no one was asked for a Dassport?

A Reprieve for Zaire From Refugee Flow

Panic on French Pullout Ends

By Keith B. Richburg

BUKAVU, Zaire - For days before France's military with-drawal from Rwanda, relief warned that this sleepy town on Lake Kive could become "another Goma," referring to the Zairian border town that was beset by up to a million Rwan-

African Birth Control: A Glimmer of Hope

By Cindy Shiner and Steve Coll

Washington Post Service
OUAGADOUGOU, Burkina Faso —
When Salimata Cisse was 14, she bore her first child. By the time she had turned 17. she was married. Now she is 35, living in squalor amid horses, goats and chickens and barely able to breast-feed the youngest of her seven children. Her husband has fathered 14 children, 7 of them with his other wife. He has no job.

For weeks Mrs. Cisse has been telling family planning outreach workers that she would like to practice birth control to ease the financial pressure that more children would bring. But she has not dared discuss the issue with her husband. Many men in this largely polygamous country, as in other nations across sub-Saharan Africa, forbid their wives from practicing any birth

This is another in a series of occasional articles dealing with the economic and social collapse of countries in Africa.

Some women facing Mrs. Cisse's predicament respond by conspiring in secret: They quietly visit Western-funded, locally managed clinics to receive birth-control pills or less conspicuous contraceptive ini-

Millions of African women like Mrs. Cisse stand today on the front lines of a struggle to control the rate of population growth on the continent.

Populations are growing faster in sub-Saharan Africa than in any other region worldwide: at 3 percent annually, which translates into a doubling of population every 24 years.

The challenge is menacing. Food production on the continent is expected to grow by only 2 percent each year in the Grim as that picture may be, family planning is one field of development in Africa where a growing range of specialists, both African and Western, see encouraging change. The fact that a woman like Mrs. Cisse, in a deeply poor and isolated country like Burkina Faso, has any choice at all to make about modern birth-control methods is itself a signpost of substantial progress, these specialists say.

Two decades ago, many African governments and intellectuals described familyplanning programs as a racist conspiracy by wealthy, mainly white governments in the industrialized world to hold down the number of people in the Third World.

No more. Confronted with swelling populations of young urban poor, facing widespread environmental degradation and shrinking per-capita incomes, most African governments have changed their tune. Some previously hostile to family planning are neutral today. Other governments that had been neutral are now actively promoting birth control and smaller

The long, angry debate about population management in Africa "is dying down for economic reasons," said Pamela Onyango, a Kenyan family planning and health activist. "Land is getting scarce, Children are becoming too expensive to educate."

As governments in both Africa and the West prepare for the landmark International Conference on Population and Development, to be held in Cairo in September, "not very many people have realized how far we've come in the family planning area," said Sally Shelton, who oversees the office of population, health and nutrition at the U.S. Agency for International De-

The agency will spend about $500 million on population programs this year.
"We're going into Cairo with a fairly broad-based consensus," she said. "A hundred percent? No. But a substantial consensus? Yes." The consensus is buttressed by recently published evidence suggesting that in at least some African countries - Kenya, Zimbabwe, Botswana and Ghana most prominently — the beginnings of what specialists call a "demographic transition," or a long-term decline in population growth rates, may be under way. Such changes reflect a recent, global shift in evidence and theory about managing population growth. Earlier, demogra-phers assumed that only broad prosperity and modernization could meaningfully slow population growth, as has occurred in Europe during the two centuries since the beginning of the Industrial Revolution.

But recent surveys in poor, politically unstable countries like Bangladesh, which has an aggressive family-planning program, have turned up compelling evidence that birth rates in the developing world have fallen even in the absence of improved living conditions, with remarkable speed," the demographers Bryant Robey, Shea O. Rutstein and Leo Morris reported in a recent study published by the magazine Scientific American magazine. Even more recent surveys in Ghana make the same point.

These findings are generating a re-newed, more technical debate, leading into the Cairo conference, about how best to slow Africa's population growth.

to supply birth-control devices to meet Africa's huge unmet demand for family planning, and to what degree should spending and programs concentrate on so-cial causes of high hirth rates, such as low literacy rates among women, poverty and the lack of control many African women have over their lives?

Many specialists agree that no matter which priority is emphasized, the key is to get the program working properly at the local level. That may require the political will of the host government, still not a given in many parts of Africa.

Such partnerships are much more easily desired than achieved, however. Burkina Faso offers a dismaying case in point.

Often, just reaching the rural population in Africa is difficult. Transportation is poor. Many doctors demand that a woman undergo a complete physical exam before she receives contraceptives, yet in northern Burkina Faso at least 80 percent of the population lives up to 13 kilometers (8 miles) from a clinic. Few people own cars, and even bicycles are bard to come by in the far reaches of the country.

Cultural traditions can be just as daunting. In many villages, it is taboo for a pregnant woman to utter the name of the child's father. People rarely discuss sex openly. Islam, which under some interpretations can be hostile to birth control, is another heavy local influence.

Moreover, many women reject birth control out of fear that their husbands will simply take another wife. When women want to terminate unwanted pregnancies, there is often little choice other than seeking abortions in unsafe and unsanitary illegal clinics. The re-sult: Africa has the highest rate of deaths and were en route to see other caused by unsafe abortions in the world. monuments, they said.

Arms-Maker Remakes Itself In the New South Africa, Firm Tries to Adapt

By Bill Keller

New York Times Service
JOHANNESBURG — Talk about political baggage: this company armed the police who terrorized black townships. It belped white South Africa secretly make an atomie weapon. Its higgest export customer in sub-Saharan Africa was the former regime in Rwanda. It flouted international arms-traffieking sanctions.

For Armscor, the Armaments Corporation of South Africa, fitting into the gentler, democratic South Afriea of Nelson Mandela would seem to require a tour de force of political dexterity.

And that is exactly what the weapons industry bere has undertaken, recasting itself as a people-friendly gen-erator of jobs and technology, a proponent of international law, and a linchpin of the government's social uplift program.

"Watch it spread the pollen and make the honey," Arms-cor says of the industry it bestrides, in an ao campaign that features cartoon honeybees flitting over a field of

The most enthusiastic booster is Joe Modise, the former African National Congress guerrilla who is now minister of defense. But Mr. Mandela has also conferred his slightly more ambiguous blessing on the industry's plans to increase foreign arms

The fate of the arms industry has sharply divided Mr. Mandela's party, where many new officials favor diverting money from the military for housing and schools, and some are dismayed at the no-tion of a worldwide weapons trade bearing the Mandela seal of approval.

On Saturday, Archbishop Desmond Tutu chided Mr. Mandela, like him a Nobel Peace Prize laureate, for not moving to dismantle Armscor and curtail the we pons

Since South Africa withdrew its army in 1988 from Angola, where it was fighting to overtbrow the Cuhanbacked government, Pretoria has cut its weapons spending more than 40 percent.

The industry's first solution has been to turn to forign customers.

Despite United Nations sanctions against the apartheid government, South Africa huilt a formidable weapons industry that is the country's largest exporter of manufactured goods, with more than $150 million in foreign sales last year.

The largest customers are Middle Eastern countries like Oman and Dubai, which buy artillery and armored vehicles. South Africa also sells

With sanctions lifted last May, said Tielman de Waal, the executive general manager of Armscor, South African exports, now about half a percent of the world market, are expected to double by the end of the year, then quickly dou-

The most rapid growth is expected to be in southern Africa, where Armscor will arrange the servicing and re-placement of old weapons supplied by the Soviet bloc.

"These are our natural markets, because we're close by and we have a pretty good reputation for quality," said Brigadier William Suss, senior researcher at the Institute for Defense Policy, a Johanneshurg research organization. "If you were on the receiving end at one stage, you are easily convinced how effective these weapons are."

Although industry officials say they have little hope of capturing much business in the advanced and well-protected Western markets,

South African weapons are enjoying a new-found respectability there, too.

One major impediment is the United States, which has retained a ban on importing and exporting South African weapons because Armscor and affiliated companies are under indictment for smuggling out American components to circumvent sanctions against South Africa and Armscor has offered to pay large fines to dispose of the case, and industry officials say the reason Americans have refused a deal is that they want to protect American weapons-makers from new competition.

Another front in the indusry's survival plan is Mr. Mandela's war against pover-

right of all women." the administration does believe that safe and legal abortion should be part of a broad range of health services available to women, the provision of such services should never violate laws of countries where it is restricted. Nor, he said, should women ever be coerced, even through social or psychological pressure, to have abortions. Mr. Gore, who will lead the U.S. delegation to the Cairo conference, opening Sept. 5, said he would work to add lanwhich scores of Somalis have guage to the plan of action mak-

KUALA LUMPUR - The Malaysian government has removed its top aviation official after a fire damaged a crucial radar installation at the Kuala Lumpur airport this month, disrupting scores of flights.
The civil aviation director-

The fire, which knocked out the landing approach radar, touched off a controversy after reports that called Mr. Gore's remarks "disthe civil aviation department ingenuous." James A. It's Time to Talk to Castro with the Castro regime?

The Clinton administration was quick to rebuff Fidel Castro's proposal of multiissue talks on Thursday. Washington anticipated a propaganda session where Havana would offer to keep its unhappy citizens from leaving only if the United States promised to ease its economie embargo, halt anti-Castro radio broadcasts, and maybe throw in the return of the Guantanamo Bay Naval Base to Cuba.

The administration says immigratioo is the only issue it will talk about. Washington should respond more creatively, insisting that any discussion of issues between the two countries must also include democracy and human rights.

Fidel Castro has had his dictatorial way with Cuba for the past 35 years, brooking no dissent, turning oeighbors into spies, and driving many of his own people to risk their lives to get away. He blames the United States for troubles of his own making and would sooner see Cuba's economy collapse than make concessions to foreign demands.

If that kind of behavior disqualified a regime from negotiations. Washington would never have been able to reach out to Mao's China or Kim Il Sung's North Korea. Neither could it have talked with Syria about Middle East peace terms, Bosnian Serbs about cease-fires or Haiti's generals about the return of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

In diplomacy, it is often more impor-tant for governments to talk to their enemies than to their friends. That is how Israel reached agreement with the Palestine Liberation Organization. But for most of the past three and a half decades, Washington has never seriously considered talking to Havana.

It ought to consider such talks oow. The especially promising moment to oegotiate, if Washington plays its hand effectively.

Once a genuine menace as a Soviet outpost, Cuba has power to influence American politics that has outlasted the Cold War. Hundreds of thousands of Cuban émigrés are now U.S. voters and their most vocal leaders have made any dialogue with Cuba a domestic political taboo. The administration is understandably reluctant to challenge that taboo. Yet its attempt to improvise unilateral responses to the refugee challenge is al-ready damaging its own credibility and jeopardizing broader American interests.

For what good cause is the administration preventing Cuban-Americans from helping their families stretch meager budgets with dollar payments? Has it not yet learned the importance of setting, and holding to, its foreign policy priorities?

The Cuban-American hard-liners from whom the administration is taking its cues want to escalate internal tensions in Cuba rapidly in order to force an explosion, and perhaps a U.S. intervention, that would bring the Castro regime down in flames. The administration is oot prepared to go that far, nor is it clear that such an Armageddon scenario would serve Cuban democracy or America's best interests. Many Cuban-Americans also shy away from a confrontation that could turn their relatives into sacrificial victims.

By agreeing to wide-ranging talks with Cuba oow, and insisting on the broadest possible agenda, the United States may find it has some bargaining power to help Cubaos struggling for democratic change. The alternative is to punish Cubans and embarrass the United States. That would oot hurt Fidel Castro nearly so much as it would damage Bill Clinton.

The Crime-Bill Sausage

It has been said that the two things that should never be watched are the making of sausage and the making of legislation. After watching the crime bill maneuver-ing in the U.S. Congress for the past few weeks, we are prepared to say that this adage is grossly unfair to sausage makers.

The Senate on Thursday finally moved to end the effort of some Republicans to deadlock action on a bill that has been discussed, amended, debated, amended, blocked, amended and finally passed by the House only to face more turmoil in the Senate. The Republicans opposed to the bill were hoping to use Senate rules, as they often have this year, to block action favored by a substantial majority. Deserving of particular praise are those Republican senators who broke with their party to shut down the absurd and obstructionist game-playing.

None of this is to say that the bill itself is so great: It is oot. It includes a slew of new death penalties that have nothing to do with stopping the sorts of street crime that Americans are rightly worried about, and some patronage junk and plenty of posturing, But it does include a very im portant measure, the ban on assault weapons, which ooe can only hope will be a step toward a more rational national policy on gun control. The bill also includes money for more police oo the street, which is good, and help for states on prison construction, and some prevention programs that cannot be dismissed entirely as "pork," although there is some of that left in this sausage.

Supporters of the bill have made excessive claims on its behalf. But the continued delay being pushed by some Republi-cans was endangering the bill's better provisioos, particularly the bao oo assault weapons.

A lot of partisanship was inevitable this year, given Republican hopes of gaining significant ground in this fall's elections (and Democratic worries that they might). It is also true that Mr. Clinton has missed opportunities to reach out to potential Republican allies and that many Republicans in Congress, especially in the House, resent baving been frozen out on so many issues.

Nonetheless, the partisan display on the crime bill was ridiculous. In the Senate, it appeared that the Republican leader, Bob Dole, who can be an effective and fair-minded legislator, yielded strategic control to Senator Phil Gramm of Texas, his potential 1996 presidential rival, who prefers to burn the house down. In this battle, the Republicans have damaged Mr. Clinton and the Democrats but also, we expect, themselves.

-THE WASHINGTON POST.

Nasty, Sloppy, Ineffective

The U.S. Congress heads out on vacatioo oot having passed a bealth care bill, but that is hardly all. It has oot passed any other significant legislation this year. It will have another month, an extremely crowded one, when it comes back after Labor Day, and the final weeks tend to be the busy ones in any Congress. A lot of business may be transacted then. So far, bowever, the record is as dismal as in any legislative year in recent memory. ft is back to gridlock, or so it has seemed lately — but of a oasty, internecine kind that makes the Bush administration seem like a checkers game by comparison. The president and this same Congress did pretty well last year, their first in office. They moved to reduce the deficit, restore the tax code's cutting edge, revive and expand assorted programs for the poor, restructure college student aid, adopt a national service program, pass the family leave bill and approve the North American Free Trade Agreement. Not bad. But this year?

The bealth care bill is stuck, of course, bot bealth care is hard. Campaign finance reform is also stuck, and it ought to be easy. Congress passed the present bill a couple of years ago, when they knew that President George Bush would veto it. It is not complicated. It is just that legislators don't want to do it. A lesser ethics bill having to do with lobbying disclosure and the plying of members and their staifs with gifts is also still bung up.

This Congress is supposed to approve the oew international trade agreement. It has oot done so. Who knows if there will be time? A bill to modernize federal regulation of the telecommunications industry is in an uncertain state. Welfare reform has been put off. A housing bill may or may oot pass; no matter that it would make overdue improvements in aspects of public bousing policy that members of both parties constantly deplore. A bill to reauthorize the main forms of federal aid to education — surely a Democratic Congress can do that — has only recently been sent to conference.

A proposed strengthening of the Clean Water Act has been shelved; so also a proposal to straighten out the regulation of pesticides, a chronie mess. A restructuring of the inaptly named Superfund program for toxic-waste cleanup may or may oot pass; it has been dragged out until there is barely time. The safe drinking water bill is stalled; mining reform is ung op in conference.

Not even the annual defense authorization bill has been passed in final form, and only two of the 13 regular appropriations bills have been signed. Sure, legisla-tors will complete work on these and no doubt some of the rest before they are done. But what a dilatory, sloppy dispiriting process it is. Both parties bear their share of blame. No one either in or out of Congress can be proud of this.

Europe: A Sound U.S. Policy of Initiative and Insurance

By Harold Brown

WASHINGTON — Henry Kissinger, among others, has argued that Clintoo administration policies are eroding the Atlantic alliance and turning NATO into an empty shell. This is wrong, but it does raise important issues about the altered security landscape in post-Cold War Europe, the principles that should guide U.S. policy there and what alternative policies might be adopted. The principles of the Clinton administration are in fact sensible, and its policies have worked rather well. The basic issue in Europe is how to maintain, adapt and a ogment the essential institutions of trans-Atlantic security most of all NATO but also the European Union and its adjuncts - to the changed situation in Central and Eastern Europe, in Russia and the other states of the former Soviet Union. None of us can be certain where Russia's evolution will take it. Some expect it to become a large but peaceful member of a cooperative international security order, others, a resurgent and expansionist state seeking to dominate its neighbors. The principle the Atlantic alliance — and the United States, as its leader — should follow is to be prepared politically and militarily to oppose and deter an expansionist Russia should it develop, while avoiding actions that unduly increase the likelihood that it will. Most Central European and former Soviet nations also face alternative paths: toward West-

The balance for U.S. policy is not easy to strike, especially in dealing with the Central European states, whose history and geography - between Germany and Russia - do not, to put it mildly, make them naturally secure. The Busb admioistration, which should be commended for its handling of the events of the remification of Germany and the collapse of the Soviet Union, oever faced up to the issue of post-Cold War ern values and practices or toward authoritarianism, statism

and poisonous nationalism.

Chinton has taken the initiative in addressing that issue and those of NATO structure and the alliance role in and beyond Europe.

At the NATO summit meeting in January, Mr. Clinton noted that the alliance's role is critical in the task of extending security to the new democracies. With U.S. leadership, NATO moved to do so through the Partnership for Peace, which gives members and potential members the chance for practical experience in military cooperation without waiting to resolve the debate over NATO expansion.

It tailors the relationship with NATO to the condition of each of the partners, thus avoiding the premature drawing of oew lines. Russia is a partner, though it will not, in my view, ever become a NATO member. The administration has rightly been ambiguous on that question. But as Mr. Clinton stressed in Warsaw, Russia will not have the right to veto, compromise or threaten the integration of any of the new democracies into Western institutions.

Speaking to the Polish Parlia-ment on July 7, Mr. Clinton explicitly rejected a "gray zone" of uncertain security for Central Europe's oew democracies and af-firmed that NATO's expansion was no longer a question of wheth-er but of when and how.

Those who argue that the when and how are full and immediate NATO membership should say for which nations those condifor which hattons those committees apply. And they should explain their confidence that the U.S. Congress, the parliaments of the 15 other NATO members and the NATO publics are prepared to extend credible guarantees to the oewcomers that an attack on one is an attack on all.

They should also explain what effect the drawing of such a line would have on the relationships between Russia and the other nations on the far side of that line. NATO membership should not be automatic for any country.

Democracy, a market economic system and a responsible security security relations east of the new German border. President Bill policy are appropriate criteria. How and when to expand, how to expand to some "partners" and not others, and NATO's relations with ocomember partners through and beyond a transition will need to be worked out in the context of events. That context will include the economic relationship of Central Europe to the European Union.

For the next few years at least, the political evolution and the security of Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic and Slovakia depend most of all on their internal stability and in turn on their economic progress. The most important external influence on that progress is the European Union's acceptance, first of their products and then of their membership.

The wisest U.S. policy is one that combines initiative and insurance. A revival of Russian expansionism is surely discouraged by Russian knowledge that it would result in a new Cold War in circumstances far less favorable to Russia than prevailed in the struggle that had such catastropbic consequences for it.

But more insurance is needed, and it is provided by the U.S. commitment to European security, evidenced by the continuance of a strong U.S military presence in Europe and reaffirmed in two Clinton budgets. The initiative, and considerable flexibility, is provided by the Partnership for Peace; Mr. Clinton's $100 million for partnership initiatives is a significant down payment of resources to support the cooperation of NATO and partner militaries.

Both initiative and insurance are evidenced by U.S. cooperation in strengthening the Europe-an pillar of NATO in the form of the Western European Union and of the Eurocorps.

And two U.S. initiatives during the past 18 months - joining with Russia in converting fissionable material from weapons in Russia and Ukraine to peaceful uses, and encouraging Russian participation at Group of Seven meetings - are examples of incentives for Russia to choose a cooperative path, including membership in the Partnership for Peace. On the central issue of trans-Atlantic and European security, the Clinton administration has done quite well; it need not apologize to its predecessors or to the American people.

gen1

Cuba: Clinton Can Get Out of the Hole to start thinking of this crisis as a foreign policy

By Pamela S. Falk

NEW YORK — President Bill Clinton has backed himself into a corner. As thousands flee Cuba on leaky rafts, the president has just three choices, all unpalatable.

He can abandon his oew detention policy and admit arriving refugees. He can lift the embargo against Cuba, easing some of the island's economic oes. Or he can escalate the raft wars with a full naval blockade of commercial shipping to Cuba. Of these choices, only the first makes sense. Lifting the embargo now would enrage Cuban exiles in Florida and elsewhere, because it would strengthen Fidel Castro's hand. A naval blockade would enrage U.S. allies that trade with Cuba.

Instead, the president should forthrightly renounce the detention policy; stem the tide of refugoes by reinstating the payments that exile families in the United States can make to their relatives in Cuba, and ease the burden on Florida and other states by picking up resettlement costs.

The detention policy has not decreased the flow of refugees, nor is there any sign that it will. The policy is cruel to refugees and their families. It holds no prospect of creating a tiaderbox in Cuba, speeding Mr. Castro's departure from power. And it burdens U.S. taxpayers.

Nor can the United States have much hope of returning the refugees to Cube. As a Cuban official told me recently, Mr. Castro is not likely to take back a single Cuban who left.

To dig himself out of this hole, Mr. Clinton needs issue, not a domestie political one. When he does, several things will become clear. First, the more information that is allowed into and out of Cuba, the better. U.S. news organizations. would like to open bureaus in Havana, and the necessary laws have been passed by Congress, the approval process should be expedited.

approval process should be expedited.

Second, the United States needs to begin talking again with Mr. Castro. If it does not, things could get worse in a hurry, as they did in 1980.

Even with the trade embargo still in place, it would be strange if the Clinton administration could not even get to the level of negotiations the Reason administration achieved—talks that led to Reagan administration achieved - talks that led to agreements on immigration and nuclear energy and cooperation on drug trafficking.

Third, the United States should find ways to encourage Mr. Castro to step aside peacefully. But be needs to be coaxed, not pushed, or a new leader could emerge from the Cuban military who is as oppressive politically as Mr. Castro is.

To encourage a transition to responsible leadership, the administration should quietly pursue negotiations with Cuban leaders as well as dissidents. Mr. Clinton must look beyond this crisis, focus on the long-range foreign policy issues and let. the oegotiations.begin.

In the Population Debate, Think About Life and Not Just Birth

BINI CALAF, Minorca, Spain - Prospects for the United Nations population conference in Cairo oext month have dramatically changed from a useful global assessment of how to match demography and resources to an ominous donny brook.

This bolds threats of ideological, political and social disaster on a world scale. The issues, and the facts, have been vaporized by emotional steam released oot only by traditionalists insisting oo biblical strictures to "multiply" but by militants insisting on women's right to decide alone. They have lost sight of the point. which is improving bumanity's bealthy survival chances.

The seemingly tactical alliance between the Vatican, Islamie fanaticism Tehran-style and Arab nationalism Tripoli-style is shocking. It suggests an uo-principled crusade for a religious dietate that discards all appeals to tolerance and moderation.

In the Pope's view, it probably goes deeper. Since the collapse of communism, to which he rightly feels he made a large contribution, Pope John Paul II has been seeking to revive a universal "spiritual message" to fill the vacuum.

By Flora Lewis

ft does have affinities with the antibourgeois, anti-secular, anti-beartlesscapitalism, traditional communal precepts of fundamentalism. At one of his political-intellectual seminars at Castel Gandolfo, the Pope answered a question about his hostility to the Cairo conference tersely. "The question of life is a fundamental right," is all he would say.

Nobody is really challenging that But the agenda has been turned into a battlebehind the real issues of population. "It's lascism with a leminist face," an agitator for the American right-winger Lyndon LaRouche shouted at Nawlis

Sadik, president of the UN Population Council, at a meeting in Stockholm. "What?" she said with astonishment, "You don't want to empower women?"

There is a farcical side. But it is this militant feminist attempt to turn population into a power question instead of a survival question and a development question that underlies the trouble. At the New York preparatory meeting last spring, women's organizations succeeded in recasting the agenda to focus on their demands. They are reaping a backlash. "Empowerment," a modern political go-go word, provokes resis-tance. To many societies, the vague, ap-parently unlimited goal of turning power over to women is unsettling.

There is overwhelming evidence that where guls have access to education. which in turn brings health information and employment opportunity, fertility rates decline to what the society can manage. It isn't a matter of total numbers. It is the fact that development can only procreases geometrically because of dramatic decline in mortality rates. .

"Development is the best contraceptive" has long been the argument of those who would focus on economic and social investment as the best approach to limiting the rate of population growth. The answer is yes, certainly. It's like the recipe for rabbit stew. First catch a rabbit.

The pressure of population on land, water and food resources in poor countries makes it extremely difficult to reach the take-off point of self-sustaining de-velopment where extra effort produces more than it consumes.

It is idle, even demagogic, to suggest that the remedy is to cut drastically the consumption levels of the richest one-tenth of the world's inhabitants so their intake can be shared. It would not stretch far and it would not last long.

The point is to enable people to produce for themselves in a way that husbands resources for the future, that makes possible escape from poverty, opportunity for education, for basic health care, and, yes, for reproduction in a way that does oot just condemn new billions to the same old trap. Making that possi-many births are allowed.

What is new in human history is precisely that human ingenuity has reached the point where it can create far more lives than it has found the way to sustain in decency. The capacity of women to bear children has not increased. If the world entered this century with 2 billion people and is leaving it with 6 billion, it is because we have been enabled to live longer.

It is an improvement to be preserved, not thrown away with the dogma that birth is sacred but it doesn't matter what happens after. That is respect for life. O Flora Lewis.

The United Nations Should Prepare for the Borderless World Ahead

T OKYO — The United Nations may have suffered from low expectations during the Cold War, but today the world expects much more of it. The end of the Cold War, I believe, will transform or even end the traditional nation-state sys-tem. To adapt, the United Nations will have to implement a number of measures.

The oew world order that will emerge as the nation-state loses its relevance in the oext century will be more highly integrated ecocomically, politically and culturally. There be movement, as some have predicted, toward a siogle "borderless ecocomy. And the trend toward political integration will continue, as suggested by the proliferation of successful regional organizations like the European Union.

Historically, there have been two prerequisites for integration among nations. The first is a sharing of values; the second is the existence of a commoo task. Both requirements will be satisfied in the world of the 21st century. Today, most nations are bound together by a common desire for pluralistic democracy. and by the oced for international cooperation to tackle such global problems as copulation growth, nuclear proliferation, environmental degradation, drug-related social problems and regional conflicts. Only the United Nations can provide a forum for shaping such a global transformation. But if it is to deal adequately with this oew situation, the UN itself will first require reform. It must be given the power to address global threats effectively and it must become a forum where the shared ideal of pluralistic democracy is promoted. How can we do this? How are we to make the UN more effecBy Koji Kakizawa tive in the transformation away from the nation-state system? First, the UN should support the establishment of democratie governments by providing greater assistance for the holding of free and fair elections. Toward this proper support to cootinue in that direction. The successful elections in Namibia, Cambodia and El Salvador testify to the essential role of the peacekeepers' election-monitoring and ob-servation units. Civilian participation is becoming increasingly important. I therefore suggest the endowment of a memorial medal honoring the contributions of civilian participants.

Third, the long-awaited post of UN High Commissioner for Human Rights oceds adequate support and resources. The protection of human rights can be assured only if a multitude of conditions prevails. These inelude political stability, established legal procedures, an ample oumber of jurists, wide public awareness of the importance of human rights, economic development and a rise in living standards. These conditions demand considerable effort over time. To facilitate change, the UN must offer advisory activities to establish due process of law. Public information programs are important. A strong permanent sec-retariat will be needed; close coordination among the relevant UN agencies is crucial. I would propose that the UN Center for Human Rights be given enhanced resources and that the coordinating role of the High Commissioner for Human Rights within the UN system be consolidated. Several reforms are needed in the United Nations. The Security Council should be a focus of these reforms, though remedies are also needed in the economic and cultural fields. The dramatic increase in the number of member-states and the emergence of new powers with influence equal to those of the Security Council's permanent members means the council's lezitimacy and credibility cannot be ensured unless its decisions reflect the general will of the members.

The newer global powers should be encouraged to take a more active role in efforts to ensure world peace and stability. Japan has the will and capacity to do so.

The Security Council should also better represent the international community by increasing the number of nonpermanent members and redressing the im-balance in the geographical distribution of nonpermanent seats.

Unesco, which for almost a tribute to peace through its cfforts in educational, scientific and cultural fields, must now tackie oew issues. These include disputes between different ethnic and cultural groups.

half century has sought to con-

Already, through its Culture of Peace program, Unesco is contributing to conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building efforts. I hope Unesco's restructured executive board will more effectively address the complex global problems of today's world. It would be useful to revitalize the Economic and Social Council so that it can better focus on urgent issues and achieve better coordination among the agencies, programs and funds that come under the Security Council's inrisdiction.

Finally, the number of contentious cases submitted by states to the International Court of Justice has increased dramatically. , The court is expected to play an increasingly important role in facilitating the peaceful settlement of international legal disputes. The international community needs to strengthen the court's role by encouraging wider accep-tance of its compulsory jurisdic-tion by the states that are party to the statute of the court. The new world order will see a gradual crosion of the nationstate system. The yearning among peoples of the world for pluralis-tic, liberal democracy and a market economy is the basis for this trend. In the meanwhile, each state must attain democracy in its own way. The worldwide movement toward this common goal can be facilitated most appropriately by the United Nations. If it is to fulfill this task, we must encourage the United Nations to continue on its path of reform.

Schlemmer Reappraised

Show Assesses Artist's Theater Work

By David Galloway

USSELDORF - Like the quirkily effervescent "Parade" of Diaghilev's Ballets Russes, Oskar Schlem-mer's "Triadic Ballet" enjoys legendary status in the annals of modern dance. "Parade," in Picassp's sets and "dancing sculptures," Leonide Massine's choreography and Erik Satie's music, provoked a gratifying furor in Paris in 1917. Schlenamer's work, though not officially premiered until 1922, was also conceived in the way years, while the standard born artist was in military service. Twice wounded, he used his hospital stays to develop his "cubistic joke." The earliest version was performed in 1916 at a fund-raising benefit for the artist's own regiment.

Though a far cry from the starkly stylized production of 1922, even this brief prehide underscored the artist's fascination with the machine age. While the warlords were busy exploiting the destructive potential of technology, his figures, often wearing accessories that resembled artificial limbs, paradoxically suggested that art could employ technology to liberate the creative imagination.

In one form or another, Schlemmer worked, the busy technology to the country and the cou Dasseldon's Kunstsammlung Nordmen Westfalen is now making an ambitious attempt to place Schlemmer's theatrical achievements in context (until Oct. 16). That one of Germany's leading museums for modern and contemporary paintings would mount such a show, which will also be seen in Vienna and Hannover, says something about the shift of focus. Nearly 200 drawings and. costumes are on view, together with a reconstruction of one of the artist's kinetic stages.

He died two years later, in 1943, aged 54. If, on the one hand, the reappraisal of Schlemmer's work for the theater is long overdue, in another sense it is superfluous. Thanks to Banhaus artists who reached America, the spirit if not the letter of Schlemmer's experi-

Both kinetic art and performance art owe substantial, if indirect debts to Schlemmer's vision. So, too, does the pictorial theater of Robert Wilson. Schlemmer's credo that art can triumph over the chaos of life by lending it pattern and rhythm has plainly lost none of its revolutionary impact.

Discovering the Essential Pontormo

TEW YORK - The age of the monograph has arrived. One by one, the masters of the past are looked at afresh. A name is picked oot, known works whose authorship is considered to be established beyond doubt are used to lay the foundations of his ocuvre, others are tracked down and attributed to the painter. The reconstruction is then offered to the admiration of the public.

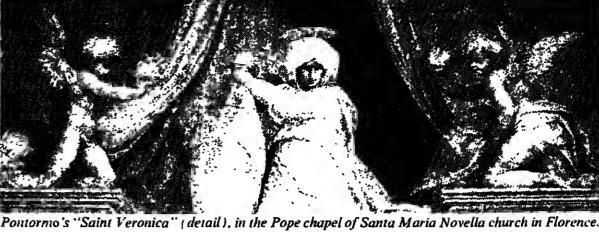

The most remarkable among the recently reconstructed masters of the 16th century is Pontormo, as Jacopo Carrucci is known after the village where he was born in 1494. Just published in New York, "Pontormo Paintings and Frescoes," with a short text by Salvatore S. Nigro, illustrates Phase Two in the reconstruction process.

After the groundwork laid by catalogues raisonnes — K. W. Forster's exhaustive "Pontormo: Monograph with a Critical Catalogue" was published long ago in Germany (and in German exclusively) - here is the essential Pontormo, cut down to 40 paintings and eight fres-coes. Trust Harry N. Abrams, the publishers, for fine color. The volume is beautiful, the artist admirable. The artist? Even pared down to a minimum, the ocuvre is not quite so solidly entrenched as the presentation may suggest. There are no signatures. In Renaissance Italy, established painters had studios in which the pupil imitated the master as a matter of course. And the master was not above adding his contribution to an esteemed disciple's effort. Bedeviling the problem, contemporary accounts documenting the works considered "safe" can be infuriatingly ambiguous. Take the great Giorgio Vasari, a painter in his own right, a greater draftsman, a fabulous collector of drawings and, by general consent, the first art historian. In his "Lives of the Most Excellent Painters, Sculptors and Architects," Vasari makes several references to the frescoes in the Ludovico Caponi chapel, which forms part of the Church a small Annunciation done for a friend This creates an astonishing kinship who died before it was finished. Is this why Saint John and Saint Luke differ somewhat in spirit? Saint John leans forward, in a rolling movement. The wind runs through the drape floating over his shoulder. If we know anything about Pontormo, this is the real article. Luke, leaning on a tablet, pen in hand, looks different, more compact, more tense. Part of the head of a bull is seen behind his shoulder, peering at the viewer with the one eye that is visible. It Sarto touch to the canopy in a fresco gives the painting a strange, slightly disturbing feel. Perhaps Pootormo owes this to Dürer, whom he admired. He prohably did paint Luke. But we may never be entirely sure.

A glance at the biographical data makes it plain Pootormo underwent many strains of influence. He was the dreadel Sarto certainly, Raphael, probson of a Florentine painter who had worked in the studio of Domenico Ghir-landaio and that surely left a stamp on young Jacopo, if only through early exposure to the pictures.

Herbert Keutner, the Gerthe predella for an "Annunciation" in a man art historian, first expressed that opinion a long time ago, convinced that he recognized the features of the Prince known from other works. But we hear from Vasari that during the siege of Florence, from 1529 to 1530, Pontormo "did a portrait of Francesco Guardi in the garb of a soldier." That description surely matches the halberdier. The game remains open — perhaps Vasari referred Santissima Annunziata in Florence in to another picture oow lost, or perhaps > TE have yet to recognize that the narrowing focus, zeroing in on individual artists who lived several centuries ago, does not lead to greater certainty but, at best, to more methodical speculation. To avoid the tedium of perpetual hypothesis, the publisher entrusted the text to a professor of Italian literature at the University of Catania. The style is chirpily allusive when not downright incomprehensible. A simple list of plates and an index would help. But in the end the only thing that is new and worth pondering again and again is the photography.

A close-up of the Santa Maria Novella fresco shows quick slanting strokes invisihle to the visitor standing in the church. These seem to echo the remark of a 16thcentury writer that the fresco was done "in great haste." Such details are enough to make the book indispensable.

The Complete Bourdelle

By Kate Singleton

POLETO, Italy - Dospite the completeness of this exhibition of works by Emile-Ansoine Bourdelle (1861-1929), the sculpture that dominates the event is not actually in the show Nor could it have been Once cast, the "Monument auxcombattants et défenseurs du Tarn-et-Garenne de 1870-1871" was too big to be assem-bled in the artist's Paris studio. It has remained rooted to its pedestal outside the Muscum of Natural History in Minthiblad; Bourdelle's hometown.

Bourdelle worked there as an assistant cabinetonaler to his father until 1676, when he obtained a grant to study at the Ecole des Bennx-Arts in Tou-louse, and later in Paris. In 1895, when the city of Montanban announced the competition for designs for a war memorial, Bourdelle, then 34, was working in Rodin's atelier. It was there that he began to focus on ana-tomical details, studied with such intensity that they appear as abstractions, numbriess al-most, of the human body.

After winning the commission he set to work on a number of studies of heads, hands and struggling bodies that were ulti-mately to be assembled in the monument, which must have struck contemporaries as disconcertingly disconnected in its parts, yet all the more dramatic and imposing for this.

Many of these studies were cast in bronze and became sculptures in their own right. They occupy the first rooms of the Spoleto exhibition with an expressive poignancy that is heightened by their fragmen-tary nature. The clawing and twisted "Desperate Hand" (1897-1898), for instance, that seems to embody a reference to senting Fear, Suffering and heve that archaism is something Death in slicekingly express dead... Archaism belongs sionistic terms; or indeed the various warriors weighed down by armor no less than fate. Bourdelle also sculpted bas-reliefs for the plinth of the war memorial, and these relate interestingly both to his earlier drawings and to the later designs for the facade of the The-aire des Champs-Elysées in Paris, "One should draw con-stantly," Bourdelle would repent to his pupils at the Grande Chaumière, where he began teaching in 1909. "Drawing is our discipline. In sculp-ture knowledge is drawing."

In one of these bas-reliefs il-lustrating "The Terrors of War," the dramatic use of fore-shortening is tempered by a kind of formal simplification that was to become a hallmark of much of Bourdelle's later work. This search for stylistic by two great periods of the Western artistic heritage: Helienic archaism (Cleopatre, the artist's wife, came from Athens. and certainly stimulated her husband's interest in Greek mythology), and Romanesque architecture and sculpture, particularly of medieval France.

Those who don't like my Rodin's treatment of the same work, and there are plenty of theme; or the three heads that them, say that I'm archaic," make up the "Screaming Fig. wrote Bourdelle. "They say that ures" (Figures ingriantes) repre- to punish me. But they also beto all times and the title they have given me, far from being a punishment, is the purest of rewards. All that is synthesis is archaism, the archaic is the opposite of copying, is the born enemy of lying — of the whole stupidly odious art of trompe l'oeil that makes a corpse out of marble. Archaic art penetrates the universal and is in harmony with it; it is both the most buman and the most eternal art."

The Montanban monument thus embodies the dramatic impact of Bourdelle's earlier work and suggestions of his later sculptures. These latter include some fine pensive portraits (Rodin with a flowing beard, the writer Anatole France, the painter Ingres, a curious self-portrait (1908), full-length but bereft of arms, in which the artist appears immersed in thought, his head bent forward) as well as a series of more allegorical sculptures that capture and explore movement. N view of Boordelle's commission for the The-âtre des Champs-Elysées and the opera in Mar-seille, many of these are actually devoted to dance, inspired by Isadora Duncan and Nijinsky. However, gentler thythms abound in the studies for mythological subjects and their translation into three-dimen-sional form, where the archaism is more evident. Less constrained by academe than some of his older contemporaries, Bourdelle was also less polemical and subversive than the avant-garde of his time. He thus mapped out a road of his own that, though interesting at every turn, has tended to elude the pilgrim hordes. The exhibition, here until Sept. 4, is a chance to see the work of a great artist in the right light: His own. The show will be at the Palazzo Ducale in Genoa from Sept. 16 to Oct. 30.

NEW YORK — The Mexicans have voted. Now it's the Americans' turn. U.S. corporations and investors are poised for a new round of ventures in Mexico after the ruling party's recent victory in an election they regard as clean enough, at least, to be valid.

Mexican stocks have jumped, anticipating and then responding to the success of Ernesto Zedillo Ponce de Leon, the governing Institutional Revolutionary Party's presidential candidate. Corporate expansions and direct investments will come more gradually, as they take more than a phone call to arrange and can be much harder to reverse.

Already, though, the rustling and the shuffling heard in many U.S. corporate in New York. "The election confirmed to a lot of people that is the case."

Mr. Verdegaal said that, rather than reacting suddenly to the vote, U.S. and been put when the PRI government faltered early this year amid the peasant rebellion in the southern state of Chiapas and the assassination of its initial presidential candidate, Luis Donaldo Colosio

The Mexican government, although committed to free markets, has a far greater role in the economy than the U.S. government does, making national elections that much more of a husiness issue.

Just as ancient Romans measured periods of time hy consulships, Mexican business people frame their long-range plans by the sexeni, the six-year presidential term.

Now, much more than before, U.S. executives are planning for the coming sexemi as well.

"Is the politics — let's call it an opening -going to keep moving in the same direction as the economic opening?" asked Hugo Verdegaal, the head of international corporate finance for Citibank

Mexican corporations hegan to breathe more easily a few months ago, as the ruling party began to recover from the uprising and Mr. Colosio's assassination. Citibank now expects to help finance government infrastructure projects, especially in electric power, that had been put off until after the election.

The investment momentum slowed this year, but Jaime Alatorre, president of the Mexican Investment Board, said he expected a strong revival. Just this week, he and his staff began calling U.S. companies that in the last few months had put off decisions on government works or investments of their own.

"Ports, power generation," he began in a interview, as if going down a list. "A number of them in textiles, garments. Those projects will be moving much faster. There are projects in the area of auto

U.S. companies are encouraged not only by Mr. Zedillo's allegiance to current economic policies hut also by the chances that he will revive other, stalled reforms. "That's a main topie: the government itself delaying liberalization until after the elections," said Ronald J. Johansson, a partner in the Kenneth Leventhal & Co. real estate consulting firm.

OMBAY - After years of worrying that its currency would steadily depreciate against most others, India has a new but perhaps more welcome problem: The rupce, may now be approximing too quickly for its own good.

Positive results from its economic reform efforts, strong exports and a flood of foreign investment have helped boost India's foreign reserves to nearly $18 billion, not counting $4 billion in gold

The growing hoard marks a dramatic minaround since June 1991, when India's foreign reserves had dwindled to $1.6 billion, alarming the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. The crisis prodded india onto a path of reforms aimed at cutting its deficit, lowering barriers to foreign trade and investment, and dismantling the so-called license raj, under which businesses had to seek permission from New Delhi burcancrats to make any major move. Now that the economy is improving and the reserves are piling up, banks, boardrooms and broadsheets across the country are passionately discussing the management of these reserves. For every voice congratulating India on the change in its fortunes, another insists something must be done about it. In an economy seeking to expand ex-ports and fight inflation, Finance Minis-ter Manmohan Singh and Chakraborty Rangarajan, head of the Reserve Bank of India's, face difficult policy choices. the curre As the foreign exchange pours in, vertible.

For every voice congratulating India on the change in its fortunes, another says something must be done about it.

A wide range of price supports and subsidies still exists as a legacy of close government involvement in the agricultural sector, which employs the vast majority of working Indians.

Pradip Shah, managing director of Credit Rating Information of India Ltd., said the government should "hroaden the band of the float of the rupee." The government exercises tight control over the currency, which is not yet freely con-

But if Mr. Singh's plans to revitalize the economy continue on target, the problem with swelling reserves could di-minish on its own. India's fast-growing economy may take in enough imports of consumer durables and capital goods to reduce the country's foreign reserves.

Most of India's big business groups have recently announced large domestic investment plans.

With much of the new spending aimed at equipment, plant and infrastructure needs, corporate India appears ready to embark on high-tech shopping spree that will probably cut into the reserves.

At the same time, the Reserve Bank may have more flexibility to deal with the problem than many realize.

"While the level of reserves is much larger than before, their size alone should not cause that much concern," Mr. Rangarajan of the central bank said. "The need for us to build up our reserves is very much there." While the central bank envisions a continued active role in keeping the ru-pee at its current level of about 31 to the U.S. dollar, Mr. Rangarajan said better fiscal discipline by the Indian govern-ment had reduced its demands for credit from his bank, easing strains on the

Nestlé Resuming Its Search for Water

ZURICH - Nestlé SA on Friday raised its stake in an Italian mineral-water company, a decision that analysts said showed the food company was likely to renew its expansion in the sector.

The Switzerland-hased conglomerate already is the leading bottled-water company in the world. It enlarged its stake in the Luxembourg holding company Compag-nie Financière du Haut-Rhin SA, which has majority control of San Pellegrino SpA, to 42 percent from 28 percent. Nestlè purchased the shares from two Italian families, the Gardinis and the Malagars.

It added it was still negotiating with the Mentasti group, which controls Compag-nie Financière du Haut-Rhin, to huy more shares and raise its stake further, to 49 percent. No financial details were given. Nestlé also has a direct 25 percent stake in San Pellegrino, Europe's sixth-largest International Business Machines and IBM Credit filed cases charging that assets owned by IBM Credit were misappropriated by Comdisco. They also alleged that Comdisco violated law by making computer systems memory and marketing it as IBM memory, eligible for IBM maintenance agreement service.

Brazil's Monthly Inflation Slows

SAO PAULO (Bloomberg) - Brazil's monthly rate of inflation

slowed to 2.86 percent, the slowest rise in consumer prices since 1986, the Institute for Economic Research said Friday.

The institute measured inflation from July 23 to Aug. 23 at 2.86 percent, a fall from the 4.5 percent registered last week in the previous 30-day period. Inflation was 50.7 percent in June and 6.95 percent in June and 6.95 percent m July.

Phone Companies Get Cable Victory

WASHINGTON (AP) - Telephone companies seeking to provide cable services over their lines don't need to obtain costly tranchises from local governments, a federal appeals court ruled Friday.

The decision, which affirms Federal Communications Commis-

"This means it will be much easier for them to build these systems rather than have to go into each and every community to obtain a franchise," said Michael Kellogg, who represented the U.S. Telephone Association, the industry's main lobby group. The cable industry, which pays local governments millions of dollars annually in franchise fees, had appealed the FCC's three-year-old policy, saying it put cable operators at a disadvantage.

Unitrin Must Halt Stock Buyback

WILMINGTON, Delaware (Bloomberg) — American General Corp. won a court order Friday halting Unitrin Inc.'s stock buyback plan.

A Delaware judge's order prevents Umtrin, which has spurned American General's $2.6 billion takeover bid, from continuing its buyback of 10 million shares, or about 19 percent of outstanding hares, until at least Sept. 27.

American General, claims the buyback would allow Unitrin directors to boost their stake to 28 percent from 23 percent. That would give them veto power over any proposed acquisition of the company, American General contends, because Unitrin's bylaws require 75 percent shareholder approval of a sale.

VIAG Profit Rises On Streamlining

Compiled by Our Staff From Disparches
BONN — VIAG AG, the energy and metals conglomerate, said Friday that pretax profit rose 35 percent in the first half, to 411 million Deutsche marks ($266 million), because of streamlining measures and re-cent acquisitions.

The restructuring measures of 1992 and 1993 are beginning to have a positive effect,"

Sales rose 4 percent, to 12.62 billion DM. Figures: adjusted

Goldman Says It May Take Share in Vox

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches DUSSELDORF - The U.S. securities company Goldman, Sachs & Co. has taken a 25.2 percent capital stake in the Ger-. man television station Vox, German officials announced

But a Goldman Sachs official in Frankfurt said the company bad yet to decide on the purchase and continued to study the move "intensively."

Media regulators in four German regions covering the Cologne-based station approved the purchase at a joint meeting Thursday in Frankfurt, the North Rhine-Westphalia regional broadcasting authority

"All divisions were able to profit from the economic recovery seen from the beginning of the year," the company said.
"We expect a continuation of this development in the second half of 1994," it said, without providing a more exact forecast. In 1993, net profit slumped 19 percent, to 302 million DM.

Building-industry chemicals posted significant gains, boosted by a "good market position" in the former East Germany, where construction is booming, VIAG said.

Capital spending for fixed assets in the first half-year increased to 802 million DM from 765 million DM in 1993. Most of the spending was for projects started in 1993 in the aluminum and energy supply sectors.

VIAG is fully consolidating results of the electricity producer Bayernwerk AG, a process that it said would be reflected in its full-year figures. As at the its full-year figures. As at the half-year stage, that means figures for the year won't be directly comparable to those of 1993, Viag said.

Although earnings were within analysis expectations, VIAG shares fell to 492.50 DM on Friday from 494.70 DM on Traders cited the Bayernwerk takeover as a major reason for the rise of more than 30 percent in VIAG's share price since last summer. The company said in July 1993 it would increase its stake in Bayernwerk to 97.1 percent from 38.8 percent. (Bloomberg, AFX)

More Hoechst Jobs to Go

Hoechst AG said it was cutting 1,081 jobs in its fine chemi-cals and dyes divisions by the end of 1995 as part of its restructuring, news agencies re-ported from Frankfurt.

Hoechst said the job cuts were part of its strategy to give up improfitable prodoction and increase efficiency in its core

2 Paths to Biotech Payoff British Firms Pursue Divergent Strategies

LONDON — Britain's two leading bio-technology companies are pursuing different paths toward a common goal of achieving profitability by the end of the decade. At first sight, British Biotech PLC and Celltech Group PLC look almost identical.

Both have an asthma drug with a big partner, both have the same type of cancer drug, and both are working on septic sbock. But industry sources say the similarities conceal divergent strategies, typifying a debate gripping the cash-hungry biotech industry. British Biotech plans to become a fully integrated pharmaceutical company in its core cancer business. Celltech aims to be a drug discovery "boutique," serving big partners.

"It's a real difference," John Berriman. Celltech's business development director, said. "British Biotech have focused their finance on one or two projects and have kept the ownership to themselves. We've chosen, by having partners, to have more projects — but clearly we don't retain as much of the

Celltech has followed the example of such U.S.-based biotech outfits as Biogen Inc. and Chiron Corp., while British Biotech has been closer to the model of Amgen Inc., Synergen

Inc. or Centocor Inc., Mr. Berriman said. Many large pharmaceutical companies, looking to biotech start-ups to supplement their flagging flow of new drugs, would prefer such companies to follow the Biogen/Cell-tech model and bring in outside partners to fund drug development.

"Biotechnology companies can best add value to the health care system by helping pharmaceutical companies get to the basis of chronic disease," the chief executive of Glazo Holdings PLC, Sir Richard Sykes, said.

"That is wby I firmly believe that biotechnolgy companies who wish to become fully integrated pharmaceutical companies are missing the point."

But James Noble, finance director of British Biotech, said retaining full control of development and marketing was still a viable option for well-funded European biotech groups working in certain bospital-based therapeuoc areas, such as cancer treatment.

Clinical trials for cancer, typically requiring few panients, are relatively cheap. Furthermore, the hospital doctors who use cancer drugs can be reached with a small sales force.

Cancer compares sharply with such chronic therapeutic areas as asthma and arthritis, areas where British Biotech would never contemplate developing drugs oo its own, Mr.

Both companies can claim recent successes in their diverse strategies.

British Biotech shares rallied 40 percent in the first quarter on optimism about clinical trials of its batimastat cancer drug, before falling back on profit-taking. This mooth they have climbed again. Celltech's stock, meanwhile, rose 10 percent in July amid ocws of an asthma drug it had developed with Merck & Co.

A Centre of Light

A major CENTRE FOR SPIRITUAL EDUCATION AND HEALING is being established in a majestic Grade I building of unique proportions in the beautiful Cotswold countryside of North Gloucestershire, England. The Centre is to be founded on the desire to bring truth and wholeness through the spirit of love and service to all people, regardless of race, creed, culture or colour.

The Centre will provide education, counselling and healing, both alternative and holistic. For those seeking refreshment of body, mind and spirit, it will act as a retreat and a place for self-healing, becoming an international focus for creative development and community outreach.

A finaocial benefactor will be providing the £7 millioo necessary for this revelational and far-reaching project, within the month of September 1994.

Sega to Buy U.S. Maker of Pinball Games

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches TOKYO - Sega Enter-prises Ltd., a leading Japanese maker of computer and arcade games, will acquire Data East Pinball Inc. of Chicago in late Sep-tember for about 3.5 billionyen ($35 million), a spokesman said Friday.

Sega, whose exports account for more than 60 percent of its sales; hopes the acquisition will reinforce its sales to U.S. amusement-facility operators, the spokesman said. Data East Pinball, which was established in 1986, holds a 25 percent share of the world's pinball machine market and had reported sales of $64 million in its latest financial year.

It is an affiliate of Data East Corp., a Japanese game-machine maker.

pan to auction half of an initial Analysts said the price of 4.7 public offering before the actual listing of the stock. The purpose of the auction is to allow the underwriters to set a price for the stock based on what investors are prepared to pay. "Investors are wondering why they purchased at a much higher price in the auction," Shigern Akiba of UBS Securi-

"No matter how you value this company, that price is too high," Eric Gan, an analyst at Goldman Sachs said.

He said Japan Telecom would not see high earnings growth over the next three years because its core business is in the long-distance telephone market, which is declining.

The company began opera-tions in 1936 and offers longdistance calls throughout Japan at rates approximately 5 per-cent below those of NIT Corp., Japan's largest telecommunications company.

Japan Telecom will become the third telephone carrier to list shares on Japan's exchanges, following liberaliza-tion of the nation's telecommunications market in 1985.

DDI Corp., the second-largest phone operator, listed on the second section of the Tokyo Stock Exchange Sept. 3, 1993.

DDI offered 7,500 shares at 3.7 million yen. The price rose to 5.4 million yen the first day. Hiroyaki Fukushima, assistant manager of stock trading at Nikko Securities, said that looking at DDPs stock price and its value, "DDI is now a little bit more attractive than Japan Telecom."

Ex-Soviets Shop in India 'Little Russia' Clients Buying for Export

By Sanjoy Hazarika
New York Times Service

NEW DELHI —At a bustling little market on the edge of New Delhi's diplomatic enclave. foreign window-shoppers and serious buyers in sunglasses, shorts and T-shirts stroll in the summer heat, glancing at signs in Russian.
This is Yashwant Place Shopping Center, better known as Little Russia, where storekeepers speak fluent Russian. Even the menus at the tiny Tibetan restaurants are in Russian. And, of course, the buyers of carpets, leather coats and fur garments, as well as jeans and jewelry, are predominantly from Russia, other republics of the former Soviet Union or Eastern Europe. Every week, chartered jetliners disgorge hundreds of passengers, mostly Russians and Ukrainians, with a single agenda: to buy. They spend a good part of their time in Little Russia, a jumble of 124 stores, most of which occupy the first bloor and basement of a simple concepts brilding simple concrete building. Few purchases are for personal use. The buyers are primarily small entrepreneurs who buy goods to sell at home for large profits.

"We come here because of two things," said Marina Galushkevitz, who runs a small import business in Kiev with her husband. One, you get a wide variety of products - whatever you want to buy you get in one place," she said. "The second reason is that you are sure of the quality of what you buy."

Ms. Galushkevitz lived seven years in Chandigarh, in northern India, where she taught ballet and aerobics while her husband, Vladimir Popov, taught Russian at a university.

Ms. Galushkevitz said she and many others from the former Soviet Union, which had extensive trading and political connections with India, were taking advantage of Indian contacts built up over the years.

Russians were once unwelcome buyers be-cause they traded in rubles, a result of a deal between India and the Soviet Union that permitted trade in their respective currencies. With the collapse of communism and the breakup of the Soviet Union, all business is strictly in hard currency.

Sales are estimated by store owners at about $25 million a year. But business could improve, they add, if air freight were less expensive and the planes more reliable.

Little Russia is about 25 years old, but it saw only indifferent growth until communism tottered and ultimately fell.

"The profile of the buyer has changed dramatically, especially after the end of the Soviet Union," said Sanjiv Duggal, a carpet dealer. "They are no longer looking for cheap bargains; they want quality goods. They are

The buyers include airline staff and diplomats as well as charter groups.

As Little Russia has prospered, similar markets have appeared across New Delhi. Savvy buyers are also going directly to plants in northern India, especially Punjab, where large amounts of sporting goods and winter clothes are produced.

"Once that trend catches on, then we will suffer," a trader at Yashwant Place said. "They won't need us, and they'll save on our commissions."

Malaysian Stocks Fall On Ruling

KUALA LUMPUR — Malaysia's benchmark stock index tumbled 2.14 percent Friday after the government gave police sweeping powers to crack down on the Islamic group Al Arqam.

"Everybody's running away - they're frightened of the Al Argam movement," said Chung Tin Fah, general manager for research at OSK Holdings Bhd.

The Kuala Lumpur Composite Index dropped 24.36 points, to 1,111.78. A total of 381 million shares were traded, worth 2.0 billion ringgit ($786 million). Losing shares outnumbered gaining ones by a 7-to-1

Malaysia's Home Ministry. which includes the police, ruled that Al Argam was an unlawful movement. Police arrested at least five members of the sect.

But analysts said the crackdown was more an excuse to sell overvalued shares than a fundamental reason for bailing out of "The ordinary guy is worried that when these guys resist, force will be used," Mr. Chung said. "But I don't think it's real. It's more of an excuse for an overbought market."

Very briefly:

• Vietnam is cutting charges for international telephone calls by an average of 10 percent starting Sept. 1.

· Jack Chia-MPH Ltd. raised its bid for Players Group Ltd., an Australian cookie maker; the Singapore company is trying to buy the 16 million Australian dollars ($12 million) worth of Players that it does not already own.

. Binh Tien Footware Co. plans to become the first Vietname company to open an office in the United States since the end of the 19-year U.S. economic embargo.

Siam Cement Co. said its half-year profit rose 54 percent, to 2.36 billion baht ($94 million), helped by cost cuts and strong results from its subsidiaries.

 China's industrial output is expected to grow 19.6 percent in August from a year earlier, to 342.5 billion yuan ($40 billion), the state information center said.

 South Korea's industries have lost $1.65 billion in production so far this year because of labor disputes, the government said. . Japanese consumer prices fell 0.5 percent in July from June and

0.2 percent from a year earlier, marking the first year-on-year decline in prices since March 1987. • Japan's automobile production fell 7.5 percent in July from a year earlier, marking 22 months of uninterrupted declines.

• Formosa Plastics Corp. earned 2.45 billion Taiwan dollars ($94 million) before taxes in the first half, down nearly 4 percent from the previous year, because of losses at its U.S. subsidiary and spending on a land deal.

Hong Kong Raises '94 Growth Forecast to 5.7%

HONG KONG - Hong Kong's economy should expand 5.7 percent in 1994, rather than the 5.5 percent originally forecast, the government said Friday.

In its half-year economic report, the government said the territory's economy continued to show "robust growth" in the first half of the year, Gross domestic product grew an estimated 5.9 percent in 1993.

Consumer spending in the first half was encouraged by full employment and sus-tained increases in real incomes, the gov-

FIRST COLUMN

Let Your Conscience Be a Guide

HE concept of so-called green and ethically-acceptable companies, regardless of which industrial sector they come from, presents a formidable challenge to investors, one which poses difficult questions.

Imagine, for example, that a trusted broker rings you up with tips on some hot (albeit, for our purposes, fictional) companies: Shoot 'Em Corp., which makes automatic weapons, is poised for huge earnings growth; its share price is likely to rise 25 percent within a year. Cleanstreams PIC, which through a miraculous new process is rejuvenating our polluted oceans, lakes, and rivers, looks fike a great bet too; its shares ought to gain 15 percent.

Granted, while many people might prefer to own shares in a concern which cleans the environment rather than in one which makes guns, most would also prefer to have the extra 10 percent return. Choosing between the two would involve a crisis of conscience for some investors. But not for all. And that's what makes the realm of ethical investment, at least at times, so perplexing.

Indeed, while many of today's ethical funds eschew companies that trade in products such as tobacco, alcoholic beverages and firearms as a matter of course, such companies give little pause to some investors. Guns, for example, while often an instrument of tragic, unnecessary violence, can also be viewed as a Godsend. The Allied soldiers who liberated Paris from the Nazis 50 years ago this week probably thought the people who manufactured their rifles were a pretty swell bunch. Times, of course, have changed.

The point, however, is that like physical beauty, the notion of what is ethical or not is in the eye of the beholder. First, people must decide if conscience, not just capital gain, plays a role on their personal investing stage. If it does, they must then begin to listen to its often lengthy dialogue.

For global investors, this column can think of few more worthwhile endeavors.

Chemical, Waste Stocks Pose Dilemmas for Europe's 'Green' Funds

By Iain Jenkins

the German chemicals concern, jumped earlier this month on the news that it had developed a product capable of filtering our harmful levels of ozone gas inside buildings and vehicles, some analysts said the development highlighted the dilemma facing investors interested in so-called green or ecological investing.

green or ecological investing.

Indeed, does the development of environmentally friendly products by chemical companies make them acceptable green investments? Or must they be ruled out because elsewhere in their sprawling ampires, they may still have waste pipes spewing out harmful effluent?

Not long ago, chemical companies were seen as one of the main culprits in the degradation of the global environment. And they still do their share of damage, say analysts. The irony, however, is that they are also the companies most likely to find ways of cleaning up the mess, and to help others cut manufacturing pollution.

help others cut manufacturing pollution.

This paradox is tying Europe's burgeoning $1 billion green fund industry—over half of which is in Britain—in knots.

Each fund, for example, uses different criteria for selecting chemical investments, and few agree on exactly what is acceptable. And just when a company appears to meet one set of green criteria, observers lament, new evidence shows that it's polluting a river from one of its plants, or some such other "ungreen" activity.

Confused? Unfortunately, the "ethics" of investing in the waste management sector are equally tricky. Waste companies, which from one perspective might seem the ideal green investment since they are managing and disposing of many forms of garbage, can also add to environmental problems rather than take them away, say industry analysts.

The only way for would-be green investors to navigate the minefield is to understand the different approaches of green and ecological funds. Then, investors can pick a fund whose policy approximates their own views, or use a fund's principles to help them formulate their own criteria, by which they can pick stocks themselves.

At one end of the spectrum is the approach of the $36 million, London-based TSB Environmental Investor Fund, which is willing to invest in such giants as Shell, British Petroleum Co. PLC, and Imperial Chemical Industries PLC. To meet the fund's criteria, a company need not be environmentally squeaky-clean, but only be moving in the right direction by cleaning up its factories and developing environmentally friendly products.

"You are always skating on thin ice, but you have to take a sensible view," said Struan Simpson, an official at the London-based Conservation Foundation which, among many activities, helps green fund managers assess companies fund managers assess companies.

"Most ethical funds tend to avoid the biggest companies. But in my view, the environmental investor should invest in the more responsible large companies. They have the funds to back environmental improvement and to sponsor health and safety standards. They have to be encouraged."

But many green fund managers disagree with this approach. Tessa Tennant, chief of green and ethical investments at NPI, the London life insurance concern, says: "It is not sufficient for a company to say that it is moving in the right direction or that it has developed a new green technology. That does not write off other questions about its environmental record."

The only European chemical company in NPI's $20 million Global Care Fund is Kalon Group PLC, which makes solvent-free paints. "It doesn't mean that Kalon is the only green chemical company in Europe," said Miss Tennant. "We are only just beginning to focus on the industry."

Catherine Westover, a researcher at the London-based investment management firm Jupiter Tyndall Merlin Ltd., which runs the Jupiter International Green Investment Trust and the Merlin Jupiter Ecology Fund, takes a similar approach to that of NPI. She also sees Kalon as a green stock, along with Greenway Holdings PLC, a small British chemical company which recycles waste oil.

"It would be shirking the challenge just to pick companies that don't harm the environment," she said. "Instead, we try to pick companies that try to do something for the environment without damaging it at the same time. Unfortunately, that rules out most chemical firms."

Her view is one step away from the harder-line green funds which will only invest in companies involved in businesses which actively clean up environmental damage. Such companies are often at the cutting edge of environmental technology.

Gary McKenzie, a fund manager at U.K.-based Clerical Medical Unit Trust Managers, which runs the $22 million Evergreen fund, says: "We only invest in companies that have an environmental business — somehow they have to be cleaning up the environment. We wouldn't invest in a supermarket chain just because it doesn't pollute, unlike some other fund managers who have merely an avoidance policy."

While most of the European green funds agonize about whether or not to invest in chemical companies, one French fund, the Biosphere fund, which is run by Cyril Finance, doesn't get hung up on philosophical debate. Their criteria allow investment in any company in which at least 25 percent of total sales are in either

Picking waste management stocks is an casier task, once it is clear that the company is not actually adding to environmental problems. Some of the favorites among environmental or health care products.

U.K. fund managers are Tomra Systems A/S, a Norwegian concern which mannfactures recycling machines, and Vetropak Holding AG, the Swiss glass firm which has a large recycling operation.

Looking forward, many observers say

Looking forward, many observers say that individual investors as well as fund managers can influence corporate sensitivity to environmental concerns. "We have got to use the stick and carrot more effectively," said Mr. Simpson. "We should publicly divest if companies don't meet certain targets."

Looking for Shares That Meet Your Ethical Criteria? OR individuals, the most diffinivestors to specify which types of complete money to go into," he said. "

OR individuals, the most difficult part of entering the realm of ethical and environmental investing can be, first, figuring out one's own criteria, and second, finding companies to match them. The London-based Ethical Investment Research Service, known as EIRIS, is one organization which can aid in that process,

A registered charity since its inception in 1983, EIRIS has developed a detailed questionnaire enabling prospective investors to identify multifarious corporate characteristics, and to establish which ones they find acceptable or unacceptable.

The questionnaire uses both the positive and negative approach, prompting investors to specify which types of companies they wish to avoid, as well as which types they wish to encourage.

Once an individual's criteria have been established, EIRIS will provide a list of up to 50 U.K.- based companies with which they are compatible. The fee for this service is £94 ($145).

EIRIS's executive director. Peter Webster, said the organization is in the process of expanding its research capabilities for individual investors to include U.S.- and continental Europe-based companies.

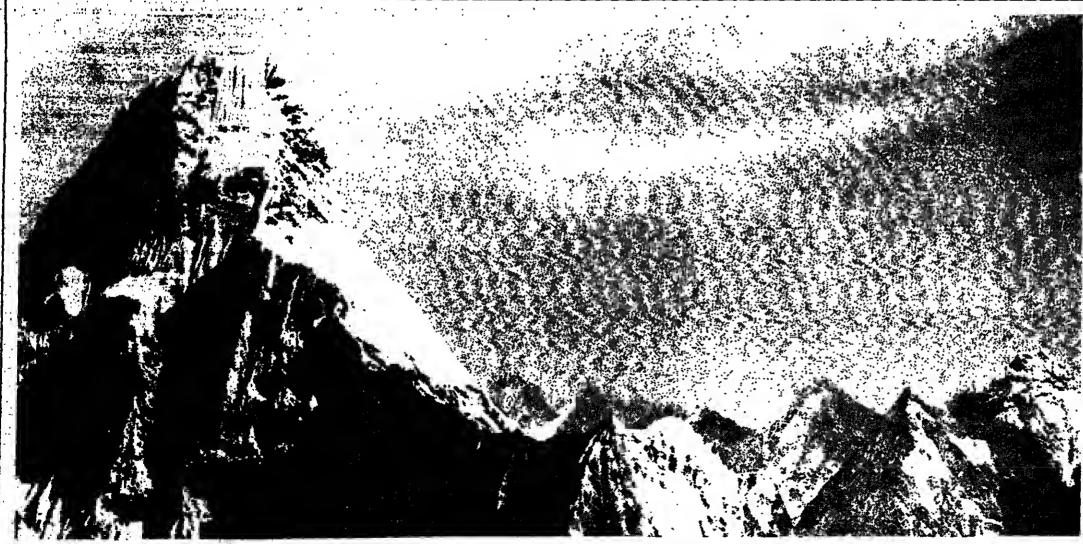

He also said that most ethical investors seem more concerned with negative rather than positive criteria. People feel strongly about what they don't want their money to go into," he said. "But many people do want to support the investments they believe in."

Other analysts add that while many people say they are interested in ethical investment, relatively few have the time to do the necessary research.

While EIRIS does not advise clients on potential investment returns, it does provide free lists of fund managers who use its service, and of independent financial advisers and stock brokers who specialize in ethical investments.

U.S. Waste Firms Picking Up

By Michael D. McNickle

T'S a dirty job, but somebody's got to do it. In the United States, waste management and disposal has grown into an estimated $30 billion-a-year business for. solid waste alone.

It wasn't always so. In the past 15 years; the waste mauagement field has mushroomed. The market now includes niche firms specializing in areas such as: environmental engineering and consulting, water purifica-tion, air emission control, and hazardous waste disposal.

A decade ago, say observers, the industry appeared to have unlimited potential. But subsequent recessions, legislative wranging and changes m the way people and companies separate their garbage has, to some degree, redefined the industry. Analysts who once had boundless enthusiasm for the entire sector now seem more focused on specific segments.

Kenneth C. Leung, a managing director at the New York. brokerage Smith Barney, said, for example that while his firm had no current interest in hazardons waste disposal companies, it did have an interest in companies that handled solid waste. He noted that, generally speaking, industry has become better at processing its own hazardous waste, reducing demand for specialist firms which collect and dispose of it. The solid waste business, he said, "had a slowdown over the last three years, but is now beginning to pick-up again. "In 1993, volume was nice in solid waste collection, and this year volume is pretty good, and pric-

Mr. Leung said his principal its part, generally feels that share recommendation in the while shares of WMX and sector is Houston-based Browning-Ferris Industries Inc. We've been recommending that stock since about the $16 level, and it is now at about $31," he said. "We're looking for a price target in the $35 to $40 range."

Browning-Ferris's main rival, the much larger WMX Tech-nologies Inc., has also started to renew analyst confidence, re-cently breaking a long string of earnings disappointments with two favorable quarters. Some analysts, however, icel that WMX is a behemoth still in the process of reining itself in, and that Browning-Ferris has a

Mr. Barton added that Browning-Ferris recently bought a 50 percent interest in a German auto waste concern, and that operating margins in Europe were significantly higher than in the United States.

T MAY seem illogical, hut ethical investing ac-States can be just as tough on environmental services companies as they are on chemical producers, long-reviled as polniers of earth, air and water.

Even more surprising, a growing number of chemical companies are now passing muster with green fund managers and environmentally sensitive investors.

"Chemicals may have a bad tive from an earnings point of ame, but they have uses," says view, neither company warrants Patrick McVeigh of Franklin Research & Development, a a listing on anybody's "ap-proved" list, say analysts who Boston-based institutional fund manager which also assesses companies for ethical investors. smaller company, Mr. Barrish suggested U.S.A. Along with several of his counterparts, Mr. McVeigh is recommending H.B. Fuller Co., a manufacturer of glue and paints. Fuller has attracted an ecological fan club by being among the first chemical companies to sign the so-called Ceres principles (Coalition for Environmentally Responsible Economies), an independent code of environmental conduct.

They changed their gluemaking process from a solventbased process, which produced hazardous waste, to a waterbased process, even though it was more expensive," said Mr. McVeigh.

Two other chemical companies on the "approved" list of many ethical fund managers are Nalco Chemical Co., which makes water purification chemicals, and Cabot Corp., a producer of carbon black, which used in manufacturing rubber tires. A more controversial choice is Sun Co, an oil refiner and petrochemical maker. Disasters like the Exxon Valdez oil spill have made oil companies pariahs to much of the green coming miche plays ontside of the munity, but the $114 million, San Francisco-based Parnassus Fund, a well-known ethical in-vestment vehicle, has no qualms clean up waste after it is created, more social investors are placing their bets on pro-active companies, whose priority is stooping waste before it starts.

Examples of the new breed are companies like lonics Inc., which is involved in water purification and desalinization, and Kenetech Corp., a wind power company. Both are favorites of George Gay, who runs the Col-orado-based Progressive Enviconmental Fund

Molten Metal Technology Inc., which recycles chemicals and bazardous waste in a 'closed loop' system, is also a top choice of many enviroomental fund managers. And shares of Wellman Inc., a recycler which makes polyester fiber out of used plastic soda bottles, have oearly doubled in price over the past year. But these are among the relatively few hright spots, ohservers note. Overall, environmental stocks have turned in dismal performances for some time.

As a group, U.S. environ-mental funds have lost 12.69 percent over the three-year period ended August 11, according to Lipper Analytical Services, the fund data group. The average equity fund rose 32.73 percent over the same period.

Some environmental fund managers lay much of the blame on the Clinton Administration. "A lot of people thought the Clinton Environmental Protection Agency would be very 'thou shalt, thou shalt not, and if you violate our rules we're going to slap you hard," said Mr. Pogran.

"But they're taking a very collaborative approach, where they want to get activists, local authorities and company executives to the same table and figure out what's wrong and the cheapest way to fix it, It may turn out to be better, but it takes longer. Now, you have un-certainty, and Wall Street hates uncertainty

Some of the problems have eome from the companies themselves, said David Beckwith, who manages the Boston-based John Hancock Freedom Environmental Fund. Stock analysts who track the European chemical sector say that BASF, based in a country already recognized as one of the most stringently regulated, understands fully the danger that European-wide legislation might pose to its bottom line.

"Companies which continue to invest in European countries will be at a disadvantage to those that invest in other parts of the world," said Campbell Gillies, chemical analyst at NatWest Securities in London. In terms of environmental regulation, the best thing these companies can do is to get out companies like Hoechst and Akzo Nobel may fear the grip of environmental regulators, analysts say investors have little to worry about. Plastic recycling and energy taxes, for example, are still under debate. Also, any EU initiative "would be introduced gradually, giving the companies plenty of time to meet the requirements," said

Ex-Player Recalls The Way It Was

By Bob Gibson

BELLEVUE, Nebraska—To me, the baseball strike tastes like the same old soup warmed over.

The first strike in which 1 was involved occurred during spring training 1969. The players' union was just coming into its own, and if we were going to have any teeth it was time to cut them. The owners had just negotiated a network TV contract that raised their revenues from half a million dollars to $17 million, and their next move was to reduce the players' percentage. All we wanted was to keep the percentage we had.

This time, with TV revenues headed the other way, the owners want a salary cap. And the players, just like in 1969.

are trying to protect what they have.
I'll give you a small example of what life used to be like for ballplayers, before we had a strong union. During my rookie season, 1959, the Cardinals sent me back to their Triple-A farm club in Omaha. We were in Cincinnati at the time, and I was told to use my meal money to buy a plane ticket to Omaha. Meal money back then was $10 a day, and I had three days' worth, which should have been just enough for the $30 ticket. But I'd already spent some of the money in the hotel gift shop, so the team bought the ticket and took the $30 out of my

By the time of the 1969 strike, I was making a good salary. But I wasn't striking for myself. I was the Cardinals' acting player rep at the time, and I was striking for the future. As strongly as I have always felt about the union, though the players' gains over the years have been enormous and I now believe that there has to be some kind of cap on salaries. But the only way the players are going to accept the owners' arguments is if the owners are honest with them - if they show them, without smoke and mirrors, that they are losing money. If the owners did that, the players wot 'a be idiots not to adjust their position.

The problem is not dollars but trust. Trust is the whole deal.

The Fans' Lament for a Lost Season

By Donald Honig

CROMWELL, Connecticut — Some years ago, in Cooperstown, New York, I talked with Lloyd Waner, the younger of two Hall of Fame brothers who played outfield for the Pirates in the 1920s and '30s.

Paul and Lloyd Waner had grown up on a small farm in Harrah, Oldahoma.

Rustling through a haze of fond memories, Lloyd talked of their love for baseball, remembering how they played with "old rag-and-twine balls," and sometimes, in a pinch, corncobs soaked in water. For a bat, they used a sawed-off

"Broomsticks and corncobs," Lloyd said. "That's the beauty of baseball - anybody can play it and it doesn't have to be done too fancy." And then the world became magical for the Waners.

First Paul and then Lloyd reached the big leagues. "Can you imagine?" Lloyd chuckled half a century later. "Getting paid to play baseball? Why, we would have been happy to play for nothing."

A few years after that conversation, the Golconda of free agency was struck and major league salaries began taking bountiful leaps from one plateau to another.

On another visit to Cooperstown, I met Lloyd again, and I asked him what he thought. He didn't begrudge the players anything, he replied. They were entitled to whatever they could get.

Then, perhaps mischievously, I said: "Lloyd, you said you would have played the game for nothing. Did you

He did not immediately respond. His thoughts might have been running back to the open pastures of the Oklahoma farm where he and Paul had whipped their broomsticks through the air 70 years ago.

Finally, he looked at me and with a soft, indulgent smile, said, "I think I would have asked for expenses."

Donald Honig, a novelist and baseball historian, is author, most recently, of "Last Man Out." He wrote this for The New York Times.

A SECOND PROPERTY OF THE PROPE

NEW YORK — I know the past is gone. But I can still remember that spring day in the early 1950s. I held my grandfather's hand as we walked up the ramp, out of the darkness, and I saw the little green jewel box that was Fenway Park.

The memory is still as vivid today as it was more than 40 years ago: the sun making me squint, the green of Mr. Yawkey's special grass, the smells and sounds of baseball. Most of all, I remember the look on my grandfather's face - he in his suit and tie, with his hat and his ever-present pipe. I knew I belonged in this magical place. A few years later, Mr. Yawkey personally answered a little girl's request for an autograph of Ted Williams. He returned my piece of paper and my three-cent stamp, in a little box with an ball antographed not just by Williams but by that whole team.

When I became an actress, touring in Broadway musicals, baseball stanched the loneliness of strange towns. I'd go to an afternoon game, and there, in Oakland or Pitts-burgh or Minneapolis, I'd sit in the stands and find a family. We'd swap stories and lives - the family of baseball, an immediate connection of strangers, fans sharing an after-

What I miss right now is not so much the records being chased in this generation of mediocrity and hype. For me, that part of the season has already been ruined by the strike. What I miss is the family: coming into the Yankees' locker room at 3:30 in the afternoon and seeing who came out for early hitting,

I miss Manager Buck Showalter with his myriad lineups, poring over minor league reports. I miss watching an old friend, Wade Boggs, regain his confidence and take a run at another batting title. And a new friend, reliever Joe Ansanio, finding himself, at 28, a rookie in the middle of a pennant race.

They've diluted the game and watered down the talent. I've learned to live with that. But now they've taken it away. Maybe it's time I grew up. Maybe it's time we all did.

"Suryn Waldman, who covers the Yankees for WFAN radio, wrote this for The New York Times."

Barrichello, 22, made the most of a drying track on the highspeed Spa-Francorchamps circuit, the longest on the Formula One calendar, to clock a best time of one minute, 21.163 seconds in the final minute of the opening qualifying session. He finished three-tenths of a second ahead of Michael Schumaeher, in a Benetton, after an hour of intriguing action on a partly wet track.

Tampa Bay's Hugh Culverhouse Dies

NEW YORK (NYT) — Hugh W. Culverhouse, 75, who had owned the Tampa Bay Buccaneers since they were awarded a National Football League franchise in 1974, died in New Orleans of heart failure after a recurrence of lung cancer 20 months ago. He had been undergoing experimental treatment for a week at a New Orleans hospital.

Culverhouse was a tax lawyer, real-estate developer, business executive and notary public. Fortune magazine estimated his worth at $360 million. Fellow NFL club owners had high regard for his business sense and made him the chairman of the league's finance committee. He led that group during the player strikes of

However, Culverhouse's frugally run team was a chronic loser. After losing its first 26 games, it somehow fell one game short of reaching the Super Bowl after the 1979 season. The Bucs finished last year with a 5-11 record, their 11th consecutive season with 10

Star-Power Outage Dims the U.S. Open

By Michael Wilbon

Washingon—It has come to the point that whenever I see a clip of one of the top 20 teams players on TV I flinch. It's Pavlovian: Top tennis player, bad news. When is the last time tennis had anything to beat its chest about?

When it's not retirement it's burnout, and when it's not burnout it's a bizarre stabbing, or a stalking father, or a marginana bust, or apathy, or injury, or under-

I love tennis so much I watched an entire three-set seniors match the other day be-

Vantage Point · tween Connors and Borg. Cosmors looks older than Smairs and Borg was laboring so mightily he may as well have been Fred Perry, but I needed a tennis fix, and the quality of play between

Borg and Connors couldn't be much lower than what we may watch for the next two weeks at the U.S. Open. Pete Sampras had to pull out of an Open warmup tournament because of tendinitis in his ankle. Sampras is the No. 1 player in the world, maybe the new Laver, a genius without soap opera. Goran Ivanisevic, the No. 2 seed, also pulled up lame this week. Staffi Graf, the No. 1 woman, has been lying on the court during breaks stretching her troubled back.

smell the freshly cut grass and take a trip back to a time when players were all white and used wooden rackets. But you go to the U.S. Open for the stars. You know how Americans are: to hell with tradition, give me Country strutting and McEnree swearing and Scies grunting.

But Connors, you'll remember, recently decided he wasn't fit enough to justify playing at the Open anymore. No Connors. McEnroe is in the TV booth. Seles has been away from the game so long after she was stabbed that one has to wonder whether she'll ever be a top player again, if a player at all.

Martina Navratilova could probably win this thing, except she's not coming. Who knows whether Graf will be able to play effectively, if at all? Jim Courier, Mr. Personality, appears to be in the early throes of burnout, although he says he'll play the Open. Jennifer Capriati is somewhere doing what she should have been doing in the first place: trying to grow up.

Any woman could lose to Mary Pierce, but you never know when she'll have to pull out of a tononament at the last second because her lunatic father may blow in Pierce, if her pop stays away, has the talent and the game to beaf Graf at her best and maybe even Seles at her best, but Who knows when she'll have to go running for safety? ...

We know Gabriels Sabatini will play, but for how long? How many breakthroughs has one woman had, and not capitalized on? Is it possible we're looking at a U.S. Open where Arantra Sanchez Vicario is the favorite?

On the men's side, it looks like Boris Becker and Andre Agassi have to carry the field, and I'll bet the ranch one of 'em is going out in the first or second round. Who knows anymore about Stefan Edberg? And whatever happened to Michael Stich? Why can't anybody sustain excellence for more than two months anymore? Are we looking at a men's final of Michael Chang vs. Todd Martin? A women's final of Sanchez Vicario vs. a Maleeva?

I know there'll be plenty of good termis. The best part of the Open is going to the sidecourts early in the week and watching two hard-working pros kill themselves in the sweltering heat. There are youngsters, like Lindsey Davenport, who bear watching.

But the U.S. Open is tennis on Broadway. I want stars because stars create passion, which creates drama, which gets the Stadium Court loud and vulgar, which produces the best tennis in the world. What's happened to remis is the same thing that happened to boxing, and recently the NBA. The stars were not replaced. You can talk about Lever and Borg being gentlemen all you want, but their civility was appreciated only because Nastase, Connors and McEnroe were there for vivid, striking contrast. You don't have to have misbehavior to have exciting tennis, but you do have to have behavior of some kind, and you have to have women and men who you know are going to get to the semis, whether through tenacity or genius. Courier is dislikable enough, but genius? Please.

Sampras is genius all right, but where's his foil? Becker or Agassi? Maybe, if the tennis public is lucky. At the moment, the sport is lacking brilliance, it's lacking rivalries, it's lacking drama, and as a result, it's lacking viewers.

The 10C executive board meets Friday through Sunday. The 12th Olympic Congress will be held next week, with more than 2,000 delegates addressing issues affecting the future of the movement, and will be followed by the IOC session Sept. 4 and 5.

The executive board will bear progress reports from organiz-Atlanta, Nagano, Japan (winter 1998), and Sydney (summer 2000).

The board will also receive coresentatives of the nine cities bidding for the 2002 Winter Games, including Salt Lake City. The others are: Sion, Switzerland; Poprad-Tatry, Czech Republic; Jaca, Spain; Sochi, Russia; Graz, Austria; Ostersund, Sweden; Quebec, and Tarvisio, Italy.

The IOC will choose four finalists in January before making the final selection next June.

A key issue for the IOC is the list of sports for the 2000 Games in Sydney. Samaranch has indicated that triathlon and tackwondo have a good chance of being added, but it appears unlikely that any sports will eliminated from the program.

Last year, a controversial report by the IOC program commission recommended dropping modern pentathlon, boxing, baseball, women's softball and synchronized swimming. But Samaranch has distanced himself from the report and indicated that he's not eager to cut any sports.

At least one IOC executive board member believes the program needs more streamlining.

You might have to speculate that if the IOC doesn't climinate anything and adds two more sports, who's going to take it seriously?" Dick Pound of Canada said. "There are some sports that you have to wonder if they're really relevant. You have to ask yourself if something like dressage [an equestrian event] is really an Olympic sport."

Australian Diver And a Canadian Each Win 2d Gold

VICTORIA, British Columbia - Michael Murphy of Australia overcame Robert Morgan's early lead to win the men's 10-meter platform diving title at the Commonwealth Games and collect his second gold medal of the competition.

Annie Pelletier of Canada also won her second gold by rallying to win the women's 3meter springboard. Pelletier, who also won the 1-meter competition, edged a countrywom-an, Paige Gordon, by 0.78 of a point, and Australia's Jodie Rogers won the bronze.

Murphy, who also won the 3meter springboard and was sec-ond in the 1-meter event, was 10 points behind Morgan, of Wales, the defender, during the first four compulsory dives but overtook him during the later, more acrobatic ones.

In round three, Morgan produced a piked reverse dive that brought whoops of delight from the fans. One of the judges scored it 10.00 and two others gave him 9.5. Even Murphy did not score that highly in the entire 10-dive competition.

But the 20-year-old Australian was more consistent during the last six dives and took the lead in round six.

Murphy totaled 614.70 points, Morgan had 585.96 and Claude Villeneuve of Canada, won the men's 30-kilometer who took up diving only four walk at 2:07:53. years ago, collected the bronze with 581.22.

Canada threatened a sweep of the medals in the women's springboard when Mary De-Piero, the 1990 1-meter champion, placed third after eight dives. But her final two were disastrous and Rogers, who won a silver in the 1-meter event, came up with two good ones to overtake her. DePiero, who won a bronze off the 1-meter board, finished sixth. Pelletier, whose last two dives produced the highest two scores, totaled 529.86 points and Gordon had 529.08. Rogers scored 474.81 ahead of countrywoman Vanessa Baker, who

South Africa won its first gold medals at the Common-wealth Games in 36 years, in men's and women's fours lawn bowling.

The gold came in a genteel sport in which competitors roll black balls across smooth grass. Swearing is strictly forbidden, but competitors are allowed to drink beer and smoke cigarettes while they play.

South Africa had won one silver and three bronze medals before Thursday, and they expect to win more. They would have to come in track and field. the only sport where South Africa has any athletes remaining. The chances rest with the pole vaulter Okkert Brits, the 800meter runner Hezekiel Sepeng, the 1,500-meter runner Johan Landsman and the women's high jumper Charmaine

The Australians added to their medal cache Thursday in diving, cycling, walking and weight-bitting.

The only track events Thursday were outside the stadium in two race walks, both won by Australians.

Kerry Saxby-Junna won the women's 10-kilometer walk in 44 minntes 25 seconds for her second straight gold medal in the event. Nicholas A'Hern Australians won all three cycling events with Games' records. Bradley McGee took the men's 4,000-meter pursuit race in 4:31.371, Kathryn Watt won the women's 3,000 pursuit event in 3:48.522, and Stuart O'Grady captured the men's 10-mile race in 18:50.453.

The Bulgarian-born Kiril Konney, the 1989 world champion now competing for Australia, swept all three gold medals in the 83-kilogram class in weight-lifting, a competition marred when John McEwan of Scotland broke his right arm during a lift.

we Americans already know we mind us that we're stupid. Just have a weight problem. We oo- about every week you read a tice it every time we get out of the shower and look in the bathroom mirror and see our head sitting on top of what appears to be a towel-clad manatee. We notice it when we're unable to not correctly identify their get our wallet out of the back home planet. pocket of our relaxed-fit jeans without the aid of power tools. We notice it every time we tune in to TV talk shows, which discuss weight control almost as much as they discuss major national issues, by which I mean O. J. Simpson.

So we know we're too fat. But that did not stop a panel of coocerned experts from reminding us. This was a different panel from the ooe that announced recently that — get ready — Mexican food contains a lot of fat. This is also how the media reacted when previous concerned expert panels announced that there was fat in Italian food, Chinese food, fast food, any hreakfast food that does not taste like mulch, and of course the ultimate Death Food-movie popcom.

What I want to know is, do these expert panels honestly believe we don't know what these foods contain? We know perfectly well that we're eating fat. We just wish you experts would stop RE-MINDING us. Because the truth is, we LIKE fat. That's the way we were designed by Mother Nature (who herself is a size 24). That's wby we DON'T eat what you experts nag us to eat, namely, 27 individual portions per day of raw fruits and vegetables. We want to be like the mighty lion, which fears nothing and eats Mexican food whenever it chooses.

But we never hear this kind of good news from panels of concerned experts. They're too

I want you coocerned experts out there to put your ears down next to the page and listen closely to what I am about to say: WE KNOW WE'RE STUPID. You don't have to keep reminding us. We see the evidence all around us every day. For example: Virtually everybody who drives in front of me is an idiot. I constantly find myself behind drivers who are startled and baffled by virtually everything they encounter, as though they've oever been outdoors before. They'll see, for example, a tree, and im-mediately they hit their brakes, as if they expect the tree to leap into the middle of the road. They also brake for mailboxes, buildings and their own rearview mirrors. But above all they hrake for the most disturbing and mysteri-ous of all earthly phenomena, a green traffic light, which causes them to come to a virtual standstill, paralyzed, until the light turns yellow and then red, at which point they accelerate to 275 miles per hour and shoot through the intersection, leaving me stuck at the light, shouting until spittle covers the dash-

My point, concerned experts, is that we already know what we're like. Your message has penetrated even our fat, stupid brains. Some days we get so depressed about it that we think about committing suicide hy deliberately swallowing movie popcorn. We would wash it down with diet soda.

An American View of Cricket, the English 'Malaise'

ONDON - Groucho Marx, it is said, was taken to a cricket match and after 30 minutes of watching white-flanneled players moving balletically, and inscrutably, over the green, was asked how he was enjoying the game. "Fine," he replied.
"When does it begin?"

Another American, Mike Marqusee, a Marxist of the Karl rather than Groucho tendency, went to his first cricket match in 1976 and fell in love with it although the game is considered beyond a foreigner's ken. Cricket has been called less a sport than a secret code, chess oo grass, and, by a former Archbishop of Canterbury, organized loafing — boastfully selfdeprecating descriptions that suggest only a true-blue Brit can play, or understand, it.

Nonseose, argues Marqusee: Cricket is no more difficult than basehall "although there are those funny little rules that only come into play at a certain part of the game." As for true-blue Englishmen, they may control the sport and give it an exclusive public school image, he says, but the best players these days are those who were considered lesser hreeds in the days of empire.

Marqueee has written a novel about cricket in India and a study of the Labor party's campaign in the last election called "Defeat from the Jaws of Victory." His oew book, a history of cricket called "Anyone But England," (published in London by Verso), got surprisingly friendly reviews.

"Even if what I said was offensive to the establishment. I'm oot a threat to anybody," Marqusee said in a coffee shop in Islington, oorth London, where he lives. "I'm seen as such an eccentric in the cricket world that people think it's amusing if they don't agree — 'He's mad but this is a jolly interesting book."

No sport is as besotted with its past, he says, with its congealed notions of happy village greens, fair play, its elegaic note of "a ghostly batsman playing to the bowling of a ghost." It is a symbol of English democracy and continuity: had the French been capahle of playing cricket with their peasants, the historian G. M. Trevelyan wrote, their châteaux would oot have

Cricket is indeed the first modern team sport played on foot, Marqusee says, but he adds, "Cricket is no more the organic outgrowth of the ancient community of the viliage green than Magna Carta is the work of freedomloving Saxons." It is, he argues, less the result of social harmony than of social hierarchy: its clubs were for the oobility and gentry, its professionals the servants of the clubs.

The batsmen were the elite, the bowlers were paid to throw the ball to them. The distinction, muddled when convenient, between gentlemen and players lasted until the final Gentlemen vs. Players match at Lord's in 1962. The first full Laws of Cricket was published in 1774 by the London Club whose president was the German-born son of George III, eager to prove his Englishness (he died an en-viably English death after being struck on the head by a cricket ball).

Cricket's constitution, Marqusee says, is, like England's, unwritten and therefore open to abuse by those claiming to act in its name. A byproduct of the forces that set the industrial revolution in motion, cricket's leitmotiv is rus in urbe, country in city. It suggests a transcendent code of behavior ("that's not cricket") and is truly English in its hypocrisy, in the way it lies to itself about itself — "the cult of the honest yeoman and the village green, in the denial of cricket's origins in commerce, politics, patronage and an urban society."

Marqusee's subtitle, "Cricket and the National Malaise," has become a cliché in recent years when the English team's defeats seemed to mirror the country's decline. But he takes the ootion of malaise further back to suggest a hegemonic and exclusive view that has dogged the game from Even today, women are oot allowed in the pavilion at Lord's and Marquisee says they were only accepted at Old Trafford a few years ago when a member pointed out that he was a woman, having had a sex change operation.

Market forces oow drive the game as they do the country, Marquisee says, with company logos and hospitality boxes and corporate sponsorships and aberrant innovations such as Sunday matches in which the teams, instead of whites, wear what are called pajamas, wild-colored synthetic fabrics festooned with logos. "It's just ghastly. The reason they introduced this is because what they call the replica kit is a hig seller in most sports and you can't sell replicas of all-whites."

The game also serves politicians. Norman Tebbit's ootorious "cricket est" suggested that immigrants who rooted for oon-English sides were not entitled to be considered true Englishmen. John Major earnestly promotes himself as a cricket lover.

"The Tory party is going through a crisis, as you know. Entering into Europe has been a trauma for them because it makes it difficult to reconcile old nationalist values with the free market. Major goes back and forth from one to the other and gets attacked by one side of his party or the other, so he grabs onto cricket as a way of saying I may be pro-Europe but I actually love the old England." Marqusee's views are admittedly tinged by political bias but the strongest part of his book is his documen tation of ugly racism encapsulated in the accusations in the summer of 1992 that the crack Pakistani team had tampered with the ball.

The cricket ball, worthy of a book of its own, has baffled physicists and befuddled unipires. It remains in play throughout the match (in base-ball there are replacements as occued) and can, for example, be dampened with sweat or spit but not orangeade and pressed along its seam but oever scratched by a fingernail. "Because the one ball stays in play the whole time, the issue of what you can and can't do has always been a controversy and the line is gray.

"My basic argument is that the gray line is everywhere, it means that the powers that enforce the rules do so as and when it snits them. And when it suits them: in this country is when they play against a black side."

This summer, just as Marqusee's book was coming out, England's captain, Mike Atherton, was seen rubbing dirt from his pocket onto the ball and action had to be taken after the false accusations against Pakistan. The result, says Marquece, was typical English hypocrisy: Atherton was not found guilty but was fined.

"Whether or not what Atherton did is illegal is uncertain because the laws are drafted in the most openended and ambignous way and inconsistently enforced. I don't feel Atherton did anything wrong. It made no sense, it's as if people saw in all its incoherence, all its inconsistency, its inconclusiveness, everyone's refusal to grasp the nettle that sums us up at the moment."

Marquee sees no inconsistency between his politics and his love of cricket — "A lot of leftwingers, incloding me, are traditionalists in cricket matters of many kinds" and he can easily imagine a nationalized cricket in which entrance tickets would be free, a lot more people. would be able to play, women would be admitted to the pavilion, and everyone would wear white.

He doesn't play himself but had he the gift he would like to be a left arm spin-bowler."It's the equivalent of a screwball pitcher or a curve ball pitcher in baseball. It's a magician's art."

From the start he was entranced by the game's timeless pace and mixture of grace and guile. He also likes the fact that, except for fast bowiers, cricketers need not be super athletes.

"You can be fat and be a good cricketer, that's one of the things I like about it. Since the '80s there's been this thing of super-muscularity and scientific fitness, it's killed tennis. In cricket you get the short and the tail and the lean and the not so lean."

Like baseball, cricket is a symbol of lost innocence and memories, false or not, of the small town and the village green. What Marqusee objects to is the way cricket has been used as a vehicle for the national destiny and moral character. "It is distortion and it doesn't do the game any favors." He uses as his epigraph "At the Ball Game" by William Carlos Williams, with its last lines "all to oo end save beauty / the eternal."

That is also the way he sees cricket:
"It's just a game," he says." It has no higher moral purpose than that."
